A good story is told of-General Putnam, the Revolutionary hero, in Forney's Anecdotes on Public Men. He accepted a challenge and fixed the time, and as his antagonist approached he was greet ed with a shot from Putnam's gun at thirty rods. As Putnam was reloading his piece his adversary approached and said: What are you about to do? Is this the conduct of an American soldier and a man of honor? What am I about to do? was the reply of the general.

A pretty queston to put to a man you intend to murder! . I am about to kill you, and if you do not fight in less time than it takes old Heath to hang a Tory you are a gone dog. Of course the other turned and ran away. The second affair was with a British officer, who challenged him. Putnam accepted, fixed the time and place, and when the Englishman found him he was seated near a barrel apparently containing powder, smoking his pipe. The General requested him to take a seat on the other side of the cask, and then set fire to a match communicating with the contents of the barrel. The officer looked at the burning fuse and retired. As he moved off the General said: "You are just as brave as I took you to be; this is nothgrains of powder on the top, to try you
