A tradition exists that this blade is one of a lot of Toledos pre- sented by Charles III, King of Spain, to George Washington, and by him dis- tributed as presents among his general officers. The sword was also worn by General Jones' father, Cadwallader Jones	to the sun and projected right onward fer millions upon millions of miles, the planet Jupiter, beyond that the ringed planet Saturn, and still further out the planet Neptune, are ranged almost as if they were strung together. Between the earth and the sun Venus is swinging into line, and beyond the sun, and be- tween it and Jupiter, little Mercury is also approaching the line of march. But before these two laggards will have join- ed the celestial dress-parade, the great planets will have already broken ranks to proceed in their circling about the sun. The phenomenon is not of brief duration, like an eclipse or like the tran- sit of the planets Venus or Mercury across the sua's disk. The celestial ma- chinery in this instance is more compli- cated and ponderous. Under the above caption the Raleigh News & Observer gives the following history of the sword which the Adjutant General of North Carolina will wear at the Yorktown Centennial: It was worn by his great-grandfather, Major Cadwallader Jones, during the war of the Revolution. He wore it as Major in Baylor's 'regiment and as aide to General LaFayette at ithe battle of Brandywiue and at the surrender at Yorktown, and in other battles in which he participated. The blade of the sword wis presented by General LaFayette. It is a genume 'Toledo, and can be bent point to hilt. A tradition exists that this blade is one of a lot of Toledos pre- sented by Charles III, King of Spain, to George Washington, and by him dis tributed as presents among his general officers. The sword was also worn by General Jones' father, Cadwallader Jones the third of that name in the direct line of descent, as Colonel of the Twelfth South Carolina Regiment in the late war. The Major Cadwallader Jones who served on LaFayette's staff, was the grandson of Peter Jones who founded the city of Petersburg, Va.
