"IN THE MORNING"

"Do you see that young lady in white talking with Clark?" The speaker was a tall, dashing look ing man of thirty-five, in the uniform of a cavalry Colonel in the Confederate service. The time was a summer night in '63; the place, the hotel parlor in a occasion was a "hop" given in honor of the presence of a detachment of "For nimes are household words in Southern homes, from the mountains of Tennessee to the valleys of the Mississippi. The young lady referred to was a pretty, graceful girl, with dark, grey eyes, waying hair of a dark reddish gold, and the exquisite complexion that so often accompanies it.

"Whe is she?" asked the Colonel's swept all along the line.

"l'hat is Picton's sweetheart, Miss Garnett." "Not the same one that saved his life after Shiloh?" said Capt. Barclay.

"The same," rejoined Col. Terry.-"She is a little creature to do such a thing, but she did. You see, she was in Barclay, as he rode away. the neighborhood at the time of the battle, and somebody told her that Picton was killed. She went over the field and lungs, but still alive. She sent a boy, quiet." that she had brought with her, to hunt ... Thar, what did I tell you?" he added. The boy found Dr. Cowan, and when they got back, Miss Garnett had raised As he spoke a tawny column moved be kept perfectly quiet until morning tered by the galling fire. and the bleeding checked during the "Tell you what, boys," called out the I will stay just here, and not let him | some of the pie !" move.' And, by George, she did; she never stirred all night, and in the morning they carried him to the nearest house. and she nursed him until he was out of

"That's a sweetheart worth having," said Capt. Barclay, with a glance of admiration at the subject of thir conversa.

Half an hour later Col. Terry was at Miss Garnett's side, receiving a warm greeting, that told that the two were fast

"Tell me of all my friends in the old battalion;" she said presently. "How many?" he asked quizzically;

"more than one?" "I meant what I said," she answered, with a merry laugh and a quick, bright blush; "I have heard from 'one' of them very recently." "Does Charley know you are here? asked the Colonel.

"No; it is not a week since I left Mem phis. Will they join you here?" "They?" he repeated, inquiringly.

"The rest of the command I meas," she replied, blushing again. "A portion of it may, but for that part that you are particularly interested in, I cannot say. You know they are with the old General, and their movements can't be counted on with any very great certainty."

"They are the 'comets' of the service," said Miss Garnett. "Quite as erratic, at ton's friends carried his dead love to her grave, and then came sadly back, each questioning who would bear the tidings to the gallant sabreur far away with the old brigade.

That night the order came to join the main command, and by daylight the anall village of middle Tennessee. The troops were miles away. As they reach ed the vicinity of the appointed rendezvous, a desultory firing warned them of rest's Covalry," the daring riders whose an approaching conflict. > He stooped and felt his saddle girth as he spoke, then straightened himself and waited for the command, for he was "one of the boys." The next moment there was a ringing cheer from the ranks as Gen. Forrest rode up.

> "Boys," he exclaimed, pointing with his sword, "I want that battery captured. One regiment has tried, and couldn't better than that. I am going to lead you, and I want you to follow me."

> Another cheer was his answer, as the men fell into the ranks. "Charge ?" and down the slope rode the gallant "old regiment," never faltering as the grapeshot swept through the serried ranks, closing each gap as it was made by the deadly fire; on, on, following the lead of the tall fingre at the head of the column, till they rode right over the death-dealing guns, "sab'ring the gunners there," and the woods gave back the ringing echoes of the famous "rebel yell" as the victory was won.

Won! Yes, but at fearful cost. That fatal slope was drenched with the blood of the Southland's bravest sons. After the charge Col. Terry found himself face to face with Charley Picton. "My God, how can I tell him?" muttered the Colonel to himself, as the gallant young fellow rode toward him holding out his hand.

"It takes the 'old regiment' to do up things 'in style !" he said, grasping the Colonel's hand. "Say, Terry, did you see Miss Alice? Coleman has just got back from Memphis, and he told me she had gone on a visit to some friends in

But as he spoke he suddenly put hit hand to his side. "I am shot," he gasped faintly. It was true. A stray bullet saw a sudden ghastly pallor overspread had struck him in the side, and Col. Terry caught him as he reeled in his saddle, and rode with him to the field hospital. When the surgeon examined his wound he shook his head doubtfully. "I know a nurse worth twenty doc-
