Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D., EDITOR.

The December number of this favorite periodical appears with the popular divine, T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., as Editor, and extremely good as it has hitherto been, it has acquired increased brilliancy from his connection with it. In his characteristic initial address, "To the People," he says:

"We promise nothing, except to trust in God and do our level best. Our religion is sunshine, and the difference between earth and heaven is that the sunshine of earth sometimes gets clouded, but heaven is everlasting sunshine. We mean to cultivate the largest catholicity. We want in our Magazine to help make Sunday the brightest, and most entertaining, and the happiest day of the week. We believe there is no other Sunday Magazine in America. So the field is clear. We propose beginning in our next a series of articles of 'People We Have Met,' and will, before we get through, set forth some of our contemporaries of the pulpit and the press. They have often given their ideas of us. We will give our ideas of them." The leading article of the number is entitled, "The Christian Statesman, James A. Garfield," by the Editor, which is replete with interesting reminiscences, and is finely illustrated. Among the other particularly noteworthy illustrated articles are "Malta," "Reminiscences of an Old New Yorker," "Religious Dissent in Russia," "The Prince Imperial Memorial," "A Missionary Emancipator," etc., etc. The interesting story, "May Cunningham's Trial," is continued, and there are several short stories, sketches, essays, etc., by Eleanor Kirk, Augusta Browne Garrett, Rev. Dr. Deems, Rev. J. H. Waterbury, etc., etc. The poems possess great merit, and the miscellany is abundant, entertaining and instructive. The price of a single copy is 25 cents; the annual subscription $3; six months $1.50; four months $1; sent post paid. Address Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53; 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.
