this morning and ran up Front to the corner of Market street, where the cart came in contact with a lamp post and was capsized, bending the lamp post and breaking the lamp. The horse and vehicle here parted company and the former ran up Market street and was finally caught near the City Hall.

Gen. William MacRae.
The startling and distressing news of the death of General William MacRae was received here yesterday morning.
He died at the Globe Hotel, in Augusta, Ga., on last Saturday night, of a congestive chill.

Gen. MacRae was on his way to this city at the time of his death. He had stopped in Augusta last Wednesday on business for a day or two and while there was taken sick. He thought but little of it and even on Saturday, the last day of his life, he was dressed and able to appear down stairs several times during the day. He did not notify his relatives here of his illness as he probably did not look upon it as at all dangerous. On Saturday evening, however, he was so ill that a physician was called in who did everything possible for his relief but without avail. He was seized with a congestive chill and at 9:40 o'clock he breathed his last. The suddenness of the attack is well illustrated by the fact that an hour before his death Gen. Mc-Rae called for paper and a pencil and sitting up in bed endeavored to write a letter. This he was too feeble to accomplish and the nurse, removing the pen from his fingers remarked to him that he had best lie back and rest, as he could not write. He assented, remarking in reply that it seemed that he was too weak, and these were probably his last words on earth.

His relatives in this city were notified of his death and telegraphed at once for the necessary arrangements to be made, Capt. Walter G. MacRae leaving one hour after on the South bound train for Augusta. Capt. MacRae arrived there yesterday morning and returned this morning with the body, which was carried to St. James' Church. The funeral services took place this afternoon at 3 o'clock and all that is mortal of the lamented deceased now reposes in the beautiful shades at Oakdale, and almost upon the very spot where his boyhood was passed. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Watson and the pallbearers were Maj. C. M. Stedman, Capt.
W. P. Oldham, Hon. George Davis, Col.
W. L. DeRosset, Capt. Henry Savage, Col. D. K. MacRae, Col. John W. Atkinson and Maj. T. H. McCoy.

Gen. Wm. MacRae was born in this city Sept. 9th, 1834, and was therefore 47 years, 5 months and 2 days old at the time of his death. He was the son of General Alexander MacRae, who was for many years President of the Wilmington & Weldon R. R. Gen. MacRae, Sr., was married twice and had nine children, all sons, of whom but three are now left. When a young man General William MacRae was sent to Philadelphia, to I. P. Morris & Co.'s machine shops, where he remained for several years, and until he had learned the trade. He then returned to North Carolina and was employed in the survey of the Wilmington & Manchester R. R. The breaking out of the war found him at Monroe, in this State, and he at once enlisted as a private. He afterwards raised a company of his own and was commissioned as its Captain, and when this company was afterwards thrown into the 15th N. C. Regiment on the organization of that regiment, Capt. MacRae was elected Colonel of the regiment. He was promoted to be Brigadier General a short time subsequent to the battles of the Wilderness, and about the first of June, 1864. General MacRae returned to Wilmington at the close of the war, and was, not long afterwards, appointed General Engineer and Superintendent of the Wilmington & Manchester R. R. Subsequently he resigned this position to accept a similar one on the Macon & Brunswick R. R., and he afterwards accepted the position of General Manager on the Western & Atlantic R. R., of which U. S. Senator Joseph B. Brown is the President. While in this position, he was some two years since offered the place of General Manager of the Carolina Central R. R., and he came to this city to look into the matter, and went over the road, but declined to accept the position and returned to Atlanta. Some few weeks ago he resigned this position, and was, as we have said, on his way to this city when he was stricken down in Augusta.

Gen. MacRae was accounted one of the best railroad managers in the entire country. He enjoyed a reputation in this line that but few have achieved in so comparatively short a space of time, and there are but few railroad men in the South whose services have been so sought after, and perhaps not one who has declined so many eligible offers as he was. He was a man of singular reserve in his intercourse with others, and of indomitable will and self-reliance. He had worked his way up from the ranks in his profession as he did from the ranks in the army, and he therefore knew most thoroughly how to enter into the feelings of those who were under him. When his friendship was given, it was given heartily and without reserve, and he was truly the friend of the employes of his road, while not in any way neglecting the interests of those whom he himself served. He was careless of money where his own interests were concerned, and dispensed it with a lavish hand. His character in this respect is well illustrated by the following incident, which we have heard narrated as a fact. Some time since instructions were issued to Gen. MacRae from headquarters, to cut down the pay of the employes of the road under him ten per cent. This he declined to do, stating in his reply that if any reduction was made, it should begin at the President and go through the entire corps of officials, stating that he himself was perfectly willing to see his own salary reduced, if his suggestions were complied with. The reduction was not made, and this fact but added another link to the esteem in which Gen. MacRae was held by all of the employes of his road.

It is said that Gen. MacRae resigned the position of General Manager of the Atlanta & Western R.R. without any definite object in view, but that as soon as the fact became generally known he received several handsome offers, one of which, which came from Florida, he had inconsideration at the time of his death.
His untimely decease in the prime of his life and of his usefulness has been deeply deplored and his place will not easily be filled. His friends and admirers are numbered by the thousand and are scattered all over the Southern States.
Peace to the ashes of the gallant soldier, the unswerving friend, the incorruptible official and the noble man.

We close this brief notice by copying here a hurried notice of his death as it appeared in yesterday morning's issue of the Augusta Chronicle:

Last night, at 9:40, Gen. Wm. MacRae breathed his last at the Globe Hotel, in this city.

Last Wednesday, 8th inst., he arrived in Augusta for Wilmington and registering, "Wm. MacRae, North Carolina," was assigned to room No. 6. For the past two or three days he has been feeling badly, although yesterday morning he came down stairs and seemed able to get about. Last evening, however, he was seized with a chill, and Dr.
R. G. Hitt was summoned to his bedside.
Everything possible was done for his relief, but it was early evident that his disease was most vigorous in its attack and alarming in its nature, and at twenty minutes to ten General MacRae died, from congestion of the lungs. His body was soon taken charge of by an undertaker and prepared for the shroud. He was alone in the city, and his remains will lie in state at the Globe until tomorrow, when relatives will reach the city. Mr. Walter MacRae, of Wilmington, N. C., brother of the deceased, was immediately informed of the death of the General, and made all directions by telegraph as to the disposition of the body, Col. R. H. Anderson, of Atlanta, Superintendent of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, was also wired of the occurrence. The dead man had received every attention and care from Messrs. Atkinson and their employes of the Globe Hotel, who have also taken charge of the body, and will turn it over to his brother to-morrow.

Gen. MacRae was one of the foremost railroad officials of the South. As a civil engineer and manager, he had no superior, and until three months ago had been Superintendent of the Western and Atlantic Railroad. Lately he had been interested in building the Belt Railroad around Atlanta, and was probably in Augusta on business appertaining to that enterprise.

Gen. MacRae was in the prime of life, was unmarried, and was a man of fine physique as well as of professional attainments. He had friends all over the South, who will regret to hear of his sudden death.

Humpty-Dumpty.
Of course everybody who didn't go to the matinee this afternoon will see Humpty at the Opera House to-night. There was a very fine audience present at the matinee and the indications are that it will be a still fuller house to-night. It is well to laugh and grow fat and we know of nothing more provocative of a laugh than Humpty Dumpty's antics.

The receipts of cotton at this port today foot up 384 bales.

DOES ADVERTISING PAY?
Otterbourg's Version.
BEING EXTENSIVE ADVERTISERS we are often interrogated as above, and as often as asked, we answer emphatically, YES. No matter what your business may be, the judicious use of printer's ink pays, and pays handsomely. But mind you, there are two ways to advertise, viz: one the untruthful or blowing advertisement; the other the truthful or honest advertisement.
The use of the former class will never bring success to a dealer, for if a man uses his newspaper to practice deception, he'll be sure to sail under the same canvass behind his counter, and the people will eventually find it out, and his business can never prosper. BY NO MEANS ADVERTISE UNTRUTHFULLY. A lie looks hideous in print. For example, a sausage maker should never advertise his sausage as ALL PORK, when with his own hands he butchered the old cow that formed the greater portion of the composition. He may deceive his patrons once, and only once, for their cow-pork sausages will eventually kill his trade.
DEADER than the old cow herself. (Don't misrepresent anything you desire to sell.) If you wish success to crown your efforts, use printer's ink and energy combined; then couple these with honesty and fair dealing; then with a thorough knowledge of your business you are sure to succeed. These principles, if properly followed, will place you in the front rank of your respective calling, as THEY HAVE PLACED US IN THE FOREMOST RANK AMONG CLOTH-ING MEN IN THE SOUTH.
