Not So.

It is reported in the upper part of the judicial district that Judge McKoy will not accept a renomination if tendered him. We are authorized to state that though the Judge is not seeking the office for a second term, he will not refuse the renomination if his friends should be of the opinion that he ought to serve another term.

New Music Rooms.

Mr. J. B. Farrar has established in connection with his New Home Sewing Machine Agency a branch of Mr. J. L. Stone's Music Rooms, of Raleigh. Mr. Farrar has several fine organs and a number of organettes and music now on exhibition and will be pleased to show them to any one wishing to purchase. For music and comfort give him a call. See advertisement in another column.

To be Repaired.

The interior of the Bank of New Hanover is to receive some attention. The walls are to be thoroughly overhauled and cleaned. The work will be under the supervision of Mr. R. B. Wood. The large pile of lumber, which has for several days been in front of the building, will be used for scaffolding. Several persons have suggested that it was placed there as collateral but we thought the Bank would hardly take such lumbering collateral.

The Moon in June.

The waning moon is in conjunction with Neptune on the 12th, and with Saturn on the 13th. The waning crescent the day before her change is very near Jupiter, passing 37 minutes south. The new moon on the 15th is in conjunction with Mercury on the 16th, and with Venus on the 18th. As Venus will be at the time more than six degrees north of the moon, the conjunction will not be of special interest. The moon passes near Mars on the 20th, and near Uranus on the 22d.

Reminiscences of Fort Fisher

—Blockade Runners and Blockaders.

It was in the early days of the war, that a steamer left this port with a valuable freight and a Wilmington "boy" on board as supercargo. His fitness for the position was not doubted, and his determination to "stick" to the steamer and cargo, under difficulties, was certainly well demonstrated by subsequent events, although he failed to realize the anticipated "big profits" on the cargo.

She left the wharf, went down the river, through the inlet and over the bar, under the most favorable circumstances, and all were indulging the hope that she would make a speedy and successful run, when, suddenly, the "watch" on the look-out gave the warning cry, "Steamer ahead!" and another—and another on every quarter, and in a moment it seemed that the whole blockading squadron had risen from the deep to confront the little steamer, and all on board became quickly convinced that "every one of 'em" meant business.

In a jiffy the steamer's head was turned about and she made for the inlet, but one of the blockaders had anticipated this move, and had so maneuvered as to cut off all hope of her ever reaching that haven in safety. Her course was then changed and her head was pointed for the beach, so as to strike it as near the Fort as possible.

On and on she plunged, quivering in every timber, closely pursued by the blockaders, and as every fresh barrel of rosin went into her furnace, another volume of smoke would curl up and form a black cloud athwart the heavens, telling plainly that her speed was being increased to the utmost capacity. As the blockaders and blockade-runner neared the shore, the excitement in the Fort became so intense as to be almost sickening, for everyone expected that our little steamer would be "gobbled up" before she could reach within the protecting range of the guns.

But on she came to within a half mile of the beach, where she grounded with a lurch that came near sending everything and everybody overboard. Fortunately, she was too near the Fort for the blockaders to venture. It was at that time near sunset, and the crew, knowing that a storm was brewing, made immediate preparations for leaving her. When the boats were ready to leave, our Wilmington boy very coolly told the men in them "that he had been put aboard that steamer to look after her cargo, and he was going to stick by it as long as there was stand-room on the ship's deck." Argument and persuasion having failed to move him from his position, they left him to his lonely and perilous watch and pulled for the shore, landing just abreast of the "pulpit" or angle of the Fort.

When the crew had landed night had thrown its sable mantle over the scene, shutting out all sight of the blockading fleet as well as of the stranded steamer, and, as if to add to the discomforts of the situation, a blinding rain storm set in, which prevented any attempt at rescuing the young hero from his perilous position. His aged father, being on duty in the Fort, was told by the crew that his son had most positively refused to abandon the steamer, and knowing, full well, that his situation was one of eminent peril, he walked the beach the entire night, trusting, without one ray of hope, for the safety of his boy, but with emotions welling up in his heart, too sacred for any attempt of ours to describe.

But the night wore away, and the day, after weary hours of watching, dawned at last, when it was light enough to see the stranded steamer. One object only was visible upon her wheel-house, which, as the light broke upon it, was supposed to be "our boy," and all eyes were centered upon that object. Soon after all were startled when one of the soldiers exclaimed, "By George! he's overboard!" and sure enough, he had jumped into the ocean and was making for the shore. When the father became fully aware of this fact, he turned his back upon the scene and with heart too full of emotion to speak, went into his tent and closed the flap. But the soldiers kept up the watch, and over and anon, as the waves rolled up, the form of the boy could be seen upon their crest, as slowly, but surely, he was creeping shoreward. The excitement along the shore and in the Fort was so great that all duty was suspended and all eyes were bent in one direction—to the manly form which was being buffeted by the billows of the ocean, and, as he came nearer and nearer the shore, the soldiers ran into the water to meet him and when he was near enough to "touch bottom," they caught him in their arms and bore him to the tent of his father. The meeting between father and son was more characteristic than dramatic. The old man, seeing that his boy was safe, suppressed all emotional feelings, and a little impatiently remarked, "R—d, why in the d—l didn't you come ashore with the balance of the crew?"

Since then the door of the father's tent has been closed forever, and he is resting where the excitement of camp life will trouble him no more. But the boy is with us yet.

At the same time an executive committee to serve for the ensuing year will be elected.

Further action was taken by the Board, looking to reduction of the rates of fire insurance.

Stricken With Paralysis.

It is with great regret that we learn that Mr. Levi A. Hart, one of the oldest and most highly esteemed citizens of this place, was stricken with paralysis yesterday afternoon. The stroke extends along his entire right side. His condition is considered very critical, and at 1 o'clock this morning the utmost fears as to the result were felt by his physicians.

The Fire Last Night.

At about 12 o'clock last night the alarm of fire was sounded and a big glare which flashed up in the East betokened a serious conflagration. It was caused by the burning of the livery stables of Benj. Scott, colored, a large frame building, located on Fifth between Mulberry and Walnut streets. The fire caught from within and from an unknown cause. It spread with alarming rapidity and before help could arrive the buildings were all in flames. All of the contents of the stable, including the animals, were burned, except one mule, a calf and a carriage. These were all that could be saved, so fierce were the flames and so rapidly did they spread. It is said by some that there were between fifteen and twenty horses in the stable, but there is a more reliable report to the effect that there were but eight horses and two mules there, one of the former being a fine animal, which belonged to Sheriff Manning. Scott, the proprietor of the stables, is absent, having gone to Baltimore to purchase stock. It is said that the stables and stock were insured, but to what amount we were unable to ascertain.
