FACT AND FICTION.

The New York Herald is a great paper, without a doubt. Its abundant capital, controlled by an indomitable energy and perseverance, enables it to furnish reliable information from every quarter of the globe at the shortest possible notice, and often in advance of every other channel of inter-communication. As a news paper it is a success far beyond all its contemporaries; a fact which is freely conceded by ninetenths of the reading public. In every department of news-commercial, margeneral-it has no equal in this country, and we doubt if it has in any other

But while we concede, cheerfully, all the above newspaper excellencies to its columns, we are constrained to say that its editorial pages furnish some of the most unreliable reading of any paper within our knowledge, and its editorial comments and opinions, in many instances, are crudely cooked batches of absurdity, ridiculous in their attempts at wisdom, and fallacious when tested by actual events.

Our attention has been frequently tried and fined under it. called to these facts when perusing its editorial columns, and recently, in an has conducted the Egyptian campaign, on paper, and its censurable criticisms upon Sir Garnet Wolesley and those to whom the actual duties of that campaign have been entrusted by the British government. For several weeks in fact, almost from the hour that General Wolseley left England for the seat of war-the Herald has teemed with carping criticisms of the plans and operations of the army in Egypt, and more recently, with an assumption of wisdom approaching oracular, it has denounced every movement made by the British forces. In its issue of the 13th inst., the Herald says: For Tel-el-Kebir must be speedily captured. Of that there is no doubt. It lies directly on the road to Cairo, and Sir Garnet Wolseley cannot afford to mask it and pass on to Zagazig. He is bound to leave all safe behind him, and an Egyptian force at Tel-el-Kebir would a constant danger on his flank. Inhim for not having taken it before. The 1880. ley is not ready for the campaign he has undertaken. "Circumstances," he cost for the future.

When the British troops arrived at Ismailia they found railway carriages without engines, water carts without mules, horses without forage. These things have raised a clamor of indignation in England and the sufferings of the troops have hardly yet begun. If Sir Garnet Wolseley had possessed ordinary foresight he would have waited at Alexandria till confident fashion which marks his present dash for Tel-El-Kebir.

Yet, on that very morning, (the 13th inst.) and several hours before the Herald had been mailed from its office in New York, and while yet its mammoth presses were printing such opinions for the world's reading, Tel-el-Kebir was in the hands of the British, and Arabi Pasha's forces were being aughtered by hundreds and scattered ke thistle-down by the noonday breeze before the resistless onslaught of the British cavalry, guided and directed by that single mind which the Herald says "is not ready for the campaign." It certainly proved a "happy-go-lucky" movement for the British forces, and one which the British government would thankfully see repeated.

But this is not all. With its accustomed promptitude in furnishing the latest and most reliable news, the Herald, of the 14th inst., announces with full and exhaustive particulars of detail. the capture of Tel-el-Kebir by the British. The account is made more intergreat will come without an effort.

Relative to this achievement, the rially:

Tel-el-Kebir, Arabi's first stronghold on the Fresh Water Canal, was yesterday captured by the British troops in about half an hour. Wolseley's men fought very gallantly; the Egyptians resisted even more feebly than usual; the attack would be to exaggerate its, the relation of the State Treasurer, importance. It needed no great strate- Bevely, against the obligors on the bonds. gy either in conception or execution.

It seems to be impressed upon the mind of the military strategist of the Herald that Sir Garnet Wolseley is a fool and he would account for the wonderful success of the latter upon the truth of the ancient axiom of "a fool for luck." He warns us, however, that the show is not yet over, and that there are very suspicious circumstances connected with the capture of Tel-El-Kebir which it would be un-military and unwarranted to overlook. In this same article from which we have quoted, he

But is there not something suspicious in the readiness with which Tel-el-Kebir was evacuated? Is it not possible that the works were held by peasant Bedouins, and that the regulars escaped? "Half the Egyptians opposed to us," says a correspondent, "were rabble." There are stronger defences than Telel-Kebir on the road to the capital. There is the capital itself. Terrible scenes may be enacted at Cairo. We can only hope that Sir Garnet Wolseley will lose no more time in reaching his

As all the foregoing difficulties and obstacles had been overcome before the above had become dry from the press, and Cairo was occupied by the British before the Herald of that date had reached further than a few suburban postoffices, it would seem that its dolerous suspicionings were needless.
