Concerning Certain Relics of the Past-Dogs that have had Their Day.

George Stephenson's "Rocket," and the maguificent locomotives of to-day, are built upon the same general principle, yet the machine with which the great engineer astonished h.s. age is interesting now only as an illustration of the beginning of the invention. There were plasters with holes in them long before BEN-SON'S CAPCINE PORUS PLASTER surprised both the public and the physicians; and the triumph of the Capcine is founded upon the partial successes, or the utter failures of its predecessors. Everything of value in the old porus plaster is retained in the Capcine; but at this point all comparison onds, and contrast begins. For example :

The old plasters were slow in their action; the Capcine is quick and sure.

The old plasters lacked the power to do more than to impart slight, temporary relief in cases easy of treatment; the Capcine penetrates the system and permanently cures the troubles for which it is recommended.

The old plasters depended for any good results they might attain, upon an accident of the scientific combination of the rare medicinal ingredients which it contains.

In brief, the o'd plasters, like Stephenson's discarded engine, are switched off the track, while the Benson's goes on its way winning golden oplnions from all sorts of people.

Yet in this very fact lies the leading danger to the people who buy and use this reliable ad scientific remedy. "Hypocrisy is the trib ute vice pays to virtue." Imitation is the con cession failure makes to success. Benson's Platters are parodled in name and style.

The proprietor, William Levin, is ao artist who studied four years under Gerome in high art, he invented a process for ness and general debility." the rapid production of cheap paint-

The paintings are made on heavy muslin, which is first wet and stretched ightly on long frames. It is then cut into the required size, and stretched by a machine on a square pine frame, where it is made fast. Next the mushas dried it is ready for the painter, A coating of oil is first put on it and then a stenci: plate is laid on the mus in .stands on one side of the table and a girl on the other, and near them are s veral small pots of paint. They daub plate with great rapidity. When the steneil is removed, the muslin is seen to be spotted here and there with paint, Another stencil is then used, whose holes correspond to other Shells, Wads, Powder, Shot, Cartridge Bags, parts of the muslin, and more paint is daubed in. Two more stencils follow, and when the work is done the muslin is completely covered with a patchwork of varied colors. It is then handed to a young woman who blends the background. She uses several bruhes in running the colors into each other, and finally goes over all with a large camel's hair brush. The result is surprising. The patchwork becomes a harmonious combination of blended tints. The muslin then goes to a man who blends the forefround in the same manner. Next it is dried and passes to the finisher, who works from a model hung on her easel. She outlines the trees, fences, shrubs, and other accidents of scenery with extraordinary rapidity. The colors are mixed ready to hand, and she has simply to lay them on. A fourth and more skilful artist gives the finishing touch of light and shade. It finally goes to the artist, who may be called the architect. He puts in the palaces, castles, houses and boats. The rapidity and skill with which all work is due to long years of practice. The paint used is common house-painters' paint .-In the paint-room are racks containing small pots of paint of 3,000 different

When handsomely framed, these paintings Mr. Levin says, are sometimes hung in private galleries among expensive paintings. He knew of a wealthy Western man who had his private gallery completely filled with these paintings. In the cities the paint their makers and the naked faith of their wear- ings are sold by auctioneers, and in the ers; the Benson's reaches its ends by means of country by dry goods stores and peddlers. It is a fascinating business, as a high price may be obtained for the pictures sometimes.

Fastidious Freddie.

Everybody has heard of the Jersey Lily's beauty, which has been talked of the world over, and raved about most everywhere, but nothing has been said of what kind of food she must have. It seems, however, that she is not like ordinary mortals, but must have better food than that which would satisfy the cravings of the best of Americans. And Freddie Gebhardt seems to be the only one who has discovered the difference between the lining of the Lily's stomach and that of other people's. Freddie knows how she should be fed, and made known his possession of that knowledge on Monday evening, at the Grand fare at dinner on Monday, but it was not "too-too" enough for the Lily, nor was Freddie satisfied with it. so he sent back dish after dish, and finally inquired of a waiter who the cook was. Being told Mr. Peters, he summoned that individual to his parlors. Said Fred-him after hearing of some further re-marks he had made that he (the cook) would meet him outside if he wanted a square American settlement.

What they would have to eat is diffi-cult to conjecture, but something like the following would suit:
