Blook Drinking in St. Louis. Blood drinking is daily becoming more popular in St. Louis, and a prouinent wholesale butcher, who supplies the city institutions with meat, says there is a sort of craze for the fluid .-Bullocks' blood has, of course, long been a favorite beverage with consumpiyes and persons of wasted vitality, but it would seem that the crimson in its lukewarm state is now regarded rather as a preventive than a cure for wasted tissue. It is said that milk is but clarified blood, losing, however, its nutritive powers in the process of clarification; hence the people resort to the pure article. The taste is said to be so similar to that of warm milk that, could an unsuspecting person be blindfolded and offered a giass of warm, new milk, and another of warm blood fresh from the veins of a healthy young bullock, he could not discriminate. Not every one can drink milk fresh unadulterated, as it is too rich and causes biliousness, and not every one can throw back the head, raise a goblet of the vital red fluid to the lips, and let it slowly trickle down the throat and than milk, but rather from association. ed, and in no other way can a cure be effected.

Wonders of the West.

The discovery of a salt lake threequarters of a mile in diameter on the NO top of a volcanic mountain, about 150 miles southwest of Abuquerque, is re-ported by United States Marshal Morrison, of New Mexico, who recently visited it with Senator and Surveyor General Atkinson. The water is so strongly impregnated with salt that a thick spongy crust has formed around the margin. This natural supply of pure salt is said to have been long known to the Indians. But the most curious feature of the lake, said Marshal Morrison to a reporter of the St. Louis Republican, is a tall, white column of volcanic origin which rises from its center to the height of 100 feet, sloping toward the top, and rough enough to be ascended with much difficulty, and on There is no use. Dear heart, it we but reaching its summit the travelers were surprised to find that the cone was hollow and inclosed at its base a pool of dark green water, to which they clambered down. They found no incrustations like those on the outside, but the brine was so strong that a hand or stick thrust into it came out perfectly white with innumerable particles of salt. One of the party enjoyed a delightful bath in the pool. This is rather a tough yarn for a United States marshal to
