There is a warm controversy in England over Barnum's white elephant. Professor Flower says that the pink patches on the animal are due to an absence of coloring pigment in his epidermis. Balmanuo Squire, an authority on skin diseases, says that the patches are due to a skin disease which he can cure, Mr. Sanderson, superin tendent of the Government elephant department in Bengal, asserts that the elephant does not differ from hundreds belonging to the commissariat of the value of £150 to £200. Immense crowds continue to flock to the Zoologi cal Gardens to see the elephant. The council of the gardens forbids the public performance of religious rites before the elephant by reputed Barmese priests.

Bishop Huntington is out in an indictment of the public school system on the score of its alleged mability, as things are managed now. to impart to rising generations augthing like moral education. "The supreme individual and national good." says thebishop, "is character. Character includes clements that are moral and religious as well as the intellectual; it includes conscience, affection and will. Morality, as well as religion, gives way the idolatry of the brain, bafore and we are thus brought to confront the vast detect of our public school sys tem." As to Sunday schools, the bishop has but little respect for them as moral agents, while as to parents, "they are not moral themselves, or they lack the care, skill and ability to discharge this chief parental trust."
