A SACRIFICE. Melora is the fairest fair That ever had an ardent suitor: She's piquant, dainty, debonair. I never saw a damsel cuter! Yet, though my heart is set on her, There enters this important factor, Concerning which I do demur— She falls in love with every actor!

She raves of histrionic stars, Of Henry Irving, Booth and Barrett; I strive to bear it, yet it mars The quiet of my mental garret. But when of lesser lights she speaks With ardor, in a tamer, more romantic, And damask roses dye her cheeks, She absolutely drives me frantic!

You must admit I'm sorely tried, But since Melora is a beauty, (Her Pa a millionaire beside) I'll try to tread the path of duty, And so, if need be, I'll forego My love of art and reading Ruskin, Become her valiant Romeo, And don the tragic robe and buskin! —Clinton Scollard.

All in the Dark. The ingenuity displayed by the young men at West Point is wonderful. A lot of them sent down to New York and got a billiard table, which they succeeded in getting put up in the cellar undetected and had the enjoyment of for nearly three months. The officers got wind of it finally and organized a plan to surprise the whole gang and put them all in limbo. On the night of the proposed raid the officers congratulated themselves that they would bag the whole party; they saw the lights from the brilliant cellar gleaming brightly. They made a rush for the door, which yielded unexpectedly, and they all tumbled into the room in a bunch. When they picked themselves up and rubbed their shins they looked around for the culprits. There, indeed, was the billiard table, but not a cadet was to be found—only a paper pinned to the table making present of the whole apparatus to their beloved instructors, mentioning that they had sent down to New York and bought it for the officers as a pleasant surprise, and begging them to accept it as a token of affection.

New York's Bad Young Man. A letter writer says: Another man who is often met is the younger son of a wealthy widow or a careless father, who is allowed $12,000 or $15,000 for pin-money, besides the debts which he manages to contract with his tailor and florist. This specimen very often gets into the papers, has numerous intrigues with actresses, considers himself a frightfully wicked specimen of humanity when he succeeds in lugging some woman of the stage off to supper, and cultivates round shoulders and a wearied, exhausted and dissipated expression. He drinks absinthe cocktails, talks continually about women, and passes with the younger members of his sex as an awfully bad man. It is not infrequently the case that this youth—there are a great many of the kind in New York—imagines himself very much more depraved and wicked than he really is. His father usually knows which way the wind is blowing, and allows the boy to have his swing. After he has sown his wild oats, the young man not infrequently settles down into a solid, good-natured and thorough-going business man. He then affects the blase air of a man who has seen everything in the world and gives fatherly advice to other young men who are endeavoring to spend large incomes after the manner which he affected. These young spendthrifts are commonly the most agreeable men in the world. Once in a while you will find one who is puffed up at his own importance, but, as a rule, he has the good nature of a high liver.

The Dying Tramp. "I'll tell you what I'd like to see," remarked a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy conductor, "and that is all the professional tramps in this country tied down to the rails right in front of the fast mail." "What's the matter with you and the tramps, now?" "Matter enough. The other day, down near Galesburg, a passenger pulled the bell-rope and stopped the train. He said he had seen the body of a man by the side of the track. We pulled back-wards, and sure enough, in the ditch lay a tramp. He seemed to be dead. We examined him. Then he showed signs of life. Then we carried him into the baggage car and fixed up a bed for him. Pretty soon he opened his eyes and gasped: "Fell-off—train. Badly hurt." There was a doctor on the train, and he said the fellow was injured internally, probably fatally. He prescribed stimulants. So we skirished around and got a bottle or two of whiskey. He drank it like water, all the time rolling his eyes and groaning. He emptied that bottle and asked for more. The kind-hearted baggage-man brought a quart flask out of his chest and told us to give him some of that. When we pulled into Galesburg he was sleeping, and I was afraid dying. The baggage-man went to lunch and I telephoned for the police. When we came back our patient had recovered and disappeared. The quart bottle of whisky, a good suit of clothes and a nickel-plated seven-shooter had gone with him."—Chicago Herald.

Groaning and Crying. A French surgeon has published a long dissertation on the beneficial influence of groaning and crying on the nervous system. He contends that groaning and crying are the two grand operations by which nature always anguish, and that he has uniformly observed that those patients who give way to natural feelings more speedily recover than those who suppose that it is unworthy a man to betray such symptoms of cowardice as either to groan or cry. That some patients often have a great satisfaction in groaning and that hysterical patients often experience great relief from crying, are facts which no person will deny.
