Dishonest servants have become altogether too common and are the cause of much complaint and aunoyance among our eitizens. It has been suggested that when a girl applies for a position as a nurse, cook, or servant of any kind, she should be asked where she was last employed, so that those wishing to hire may ascertain the character of the girl and why she left her last place of employment. If this rule were generally adopted, ser rants of established dishonesty, would soon find themselves without employment
