Enterprise.

The fishing schooner Dreadnaught, Capt. Cobb, of Portland, Me., has been chartered by Messrs. W. E. Davis & Son to fish for them during the remainder of the Winter season. Capt. Cobb is an experienced fisherman on the New England coast, but the exposure and fatigue are so great on those shores that parade in full dress at the City Hall to he has brought his vessel into Southern waters, hoping to make the business profitable and at the same time much more pleasant here. He has a crew of 13 men, all of whom are experienced fishermen. The Dreadnaught is 40 tons register, 71 feet long over all and draws 10 feet of water when in fishing trim. She is a very fast sailer, an excellent seaboat and is supplied with six dories (small, flat-bottomed boats) Step Ladders, all lengths, at JACOBI's for use in fishing on the banks. manner of fishing for the crew to take the dories in the morning, leaving two men on board the yessel, which is at anchor, and proceed in different directions in search of fish. The boats keep in sight of each other and when one of the number finds a place where the fish bite freely a signal is hoisted and the other boats come to join in the work. As night approaches the boats return to the vessel, the fish caught during the day are packed away in ice, the boats are hoisted on board and the crew rest until morning, when they repeat the labors of the day before. The fishing ground this season will be the "Snapper Banks," for which place the Dreadnaught sailed yesterday, and our citizens may expect to be bountifully supplied with the genunine red snapper during the season.
