WILMINGTON, N. C. FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1885.

Entered at the Postoffice at Wilmington, N. C., as second-class matter.

Here are some extracts which we make from a long article in the New York Mail and Express, a Republican paper, relative to Grover Cleveland and the Silent Man, which make excellent reading at this time.

Everybody agrees that President-elect Cleveland can keep a secret. Since election day he has been posing as the Silent Man. He has nothing to say, and he does it well. He treats everybody with courtesy and consideration. He listens attentively. When a person is introduced to him he takes the outstretched hand in a glad to see-you-but what-do-you-want sort of a way. He gives it a good Western squeeze. Then he throws his shoulders back, and with right foot out, hands toyed with the buttons of his Prince Albert coat, he waits and listens until Col. Lamont, his secretary, touches him on the shoulder, whispers to him, and some one else is brought forward and the performance is repeated. He knows nearly every prominent man in the country by reputation, and he has studied up so well that when any subject outside of politics is mentioned his face lights up and he joins in the conversation. All the information that he receives is carefully stored away; and in his own room at night he faithfully jots down in a little book—what would the politician give to see that precious book?—his impressions of the people he has met, and the new facts gleaned about others. Everything goes into the crucible, and before inauguration day the dross will have been blown to the four winds and the nuggets of pure gold assorted and labelled.

While expectant office-holders were thronging the Victoria Hotel during the past few days, eager to catch a glimpse of the man who is soon to occupy the White House, some cringing and fawning, some satisfied with touching the hem of his garment, all anxious for a snug berth, there was one man present who would not take any office. Long before the gubernatorial convention met at Syracuse, William McIntosh, managing editor of the Buffalo News, kept hammering away in his paper and after a while got up a small-sized boom for the man whom Fortune seems never weary of smiling upon. Cleveland went down to Syracuse, where his pretensions as a candidate were laughed at. The boys from Buffalo followed and shouted for him. The bands played for him, but it seemed to be of little use. I had a long talk with the new President-elect in the Vanderbilt House the afternoon before the convention met.

"Do you think you can be nominated?" I asked, as the shouts for Flower and Stocum grew louder. "I don't know," replied Cleveland. "My friends seem to think I can. McIntosh says I can."

"Who is McIntosh?" "He's a little Scotchman who hops edit the Buffalo News. He is like a son to me. He is level-headed, and I trust him implicitly."

John Kelly did not call on Cleveland, but one of his most trusted braves was sent to say that only illness kept the big chief at home. "Please say to Mr. Kelly that I hope he will soon be around again. I regret very much to hear of his continued illness," was the message sent in return. It will please everybody to know that Mr. Kelly is rapidly recovering. He takes a gallop in the Park every fine day, and takes a great deal of rest. He is not allowed to see the daily papers, nor to read his letters. I saw him the other afternoon walking slowly down Madison avenue. He looks hearty, but his short, stubby beard is a trifle whiter, his face is pale, and he bears all the marks of a severe illness. He will go South in a few days with his wife and child, and in all probability will be in Washington for the inauguration. There is considerable talk about his accepting office under Cleveland. I know, on the highest authority, that he can have an office if he chooses, although there has been no such tender, and I know, on the highest authority also, that he will not accept one. Mr. Kelly has practically retired from public life. He is wealthy, has an elegantly-furnished house, a charming wife, and one of the best libraries in the city. John Pyne, who for years kept the large book store in Nassau street, tells me that Mr. Kelly purchased thousands of dollars worth of rare and costly books from him. He has always been a great reader. I have heard him recite Shakespeare, and repeat line after line of Byron and Bobby Burns' melodious verses without an error. He is conversant with all the standard authors, and tells delightful stories about authors, artists and poli-icians that he has met on both sides of the water.

William F. Vilas, of Wisconsin, has aspirations. His friends say that it is time the Badger State was represented in the Cabinet. Vilas has a greater claim than this. Besides his ability as a lawyer and as an orator, he is also a politician. He can say No. When the wave finally broke in the Chicago Convention, and Cleveland was declared the nominee of the party, all eyes turned to Vilas. The splendid speech that he made on taking the chair and his quickness in deciding the knotty point of parliamentary law won over the whole convention to him.

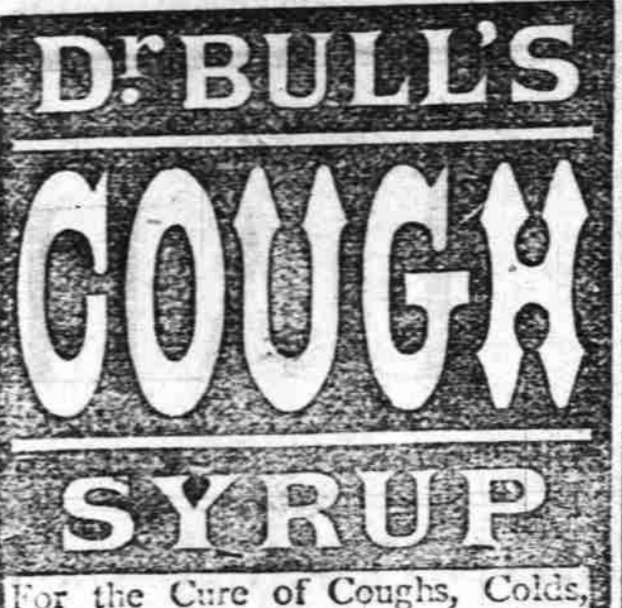

"Let's make Vilas Vice-President," said a hundred delegates on the never-to-be-forgotten afternoon. In an instant the lightning began to play about his head, and when a committee waited upon him, and said they proposed to get up a boom for him, Vilas quietly replied, "No, I am not a candidate." "But, it's the Vice-Presidency," they insisted. "I can't help it. Hendricks deserves it and must have it." "He won't accept it." "Yes he will. Let me see him," and in ten minutes Vilas returned to his room in the Palmer House and gave up the prize that he could have had by simply reaching out for it. Hendricks knows this bit of history, and Vilas has no stronger friend to-day than the man who is soon to step into the second highest office within the gift of 50,000,000 of his people. Cleveland knows it too, and the silver-tongued orator of Wisconsin need have no fear of the future. Mr. Vilas is conceded to be the only representative of the young Free Trade Democracy of the Northwest. He was a brave soldier during the war. It is believed that he will be named as Secretary of War.

Abram S. Hewitt will sit near the head of the council chamber in the Cleveland administration. He would make an acceptable Secretary of the Treasury. Although in politics for many years he is not a politician. He keeps a wakeful night thinking about public affairs, and he is always on the side of reform. His skin is thin. He cannot stand criticism. He is 62 years of age, and a model business man. He walks with head erect, and if he sees a reporter or correspondent drawing nigh, steps out of his way. When cornered he talks willingly, and then he has to visit the editor of the newspaper where his interview was published to correct errors. He is far above the treachery of ward politicians, and is not anxious to leave the House. He is a good speaker, eloquent at times, and a laborious gatherer of statistics. He graduated with high honors at Columbia College. It was here that he met young Edward Cooper, and at the latter's request visited Europe. On the return they were snubbed, and the two drifted about in an open boat in the sea for some days. Arriving in New York, he entered the employ of Peter Cooper, made a good reputation, fell in love with Miss Cooper, married her and now has an income of over $100,000 a year. Mr. Hewitt was one time a squire in Tammy Hall. If Cleveland calls him to a place in the Cabinet he will accept the offer. He will consider it his duty to do so. If it will not wait. Perhaps he may wait to make a Cabinet of his own, say four years from now!

It is a troublesome question: Who is to be the Lady of the White House? Gossip's tongue is never idle. The President's sisters will do the honors for awhile; but when they reach Washington they will be confronted by a fine looking lady of 50 years of age, who is ambitious to shine in the fierce light that beats upon a throne. Mrs. Hendricks is desirous of social honors. She is the confidential adviser of her husband. He never takes any important step without consulting her, and many people think that it was to please her that he accepted the Vice-Presidential nomination. Mr. and Mrs. Hendricks entertain admirably, but not elaborately. They have no children. Their only boy died when but three years old in 1851. Mrs. Hendricks is rather small of stature, with dark hair and eyes. She wears an eye-glass, which gives her something of a distinguished appearance, and she dresses richly, but plainly. She is a brilliant conversationalist and a lady of rare tact. For many years she has devoted much attention to charitable matters and for four years was one of the board of trustees appointed by the Republican Governor of the Indiana Institution for the Reformation of Girls. White president of the board, a legislative investigation of the institution was held and developed the fact that its affairs had been managed much more economically and effectively than when under control of men. When Mr. Hendricks was Governor of the State she visited with him the various penal and reformatory institutions and was not satisfied with a casual inspection of them, but inquired into their affairs closely. She is valuable to him in various other ways, for she has an extended knowledge of political affairs and excellent judgment regarding them. All of his carefully prepared speeches bear the impress of her work. They are a charming couple, thoroughly congenial and almost equally talented. Mr. Hendricks, it is feared, will cut up some queer pranks while in office, and Mrs. Hendricks has grit enough to settle all social questions in a way that will leave no doubt as to the situation, unless Couillard drops an arrow into the White House, and the marriage bells are rung for Grover Cleveland and his bride!
