The Wilmington Light Infantry at Asheville-Incidents of the Trip-Accident to the Goldsboro Rifles-List of the Wounded - Life in Camp, &c., &c.

CAMP SCALES, N. C., July 23. DEAR REVIEW:-Thinking possibly that a few notes from our boys might interest your readers, I have concluded to pen you a brief sketch of our trip to this point. We left Wilmington, as of the 21st ipst., arriving at Goldsboro about noon of the same day, when we, together with the Sampson Light Infahtry, were met at the depot by a committee of the Goldsboro Rifles and conducted to their armory to partake of a nice collation spread for us, which we enjoyed immensely and for which we are very much indebted to our Goldsboro comrades. The weather has been intense ever since our departure. We remained at Goldsboro until 5 o'clock among us soon, fully restored. p.m., when we boarded the train for this objective point. At Greensboro we overtook a portion of the State Guard, and at Salisbury our train was divided into two sections, our company being in the last section, which was a most fortunate thing for us as will be shown as I proceed with my letter. The boys have all been in splendid spirits, and seem to be having a nice time. Of course we were very have been already informed by tele- had. Mr. Kelley spread out on the were the recipients this morning of graph, the first section of our train met with an accident between this point and Black Mountain, which is likely to countryman selected one of the costliest, organization, sent them by the Newthe Goldsboro company. It seems that the engineer was either neglectful of his duty, or his engine got from under his control. In conversation with Lieut. Bain, of the Goldsboro company, who, by the way, was himself slightly hurt, I learn the train was running at least 60 miles an hour, and in rounding a very slight curve, the car containing the company mentioned jumped the track and ran at least a quarter of a mile, and was then precipitated down an embankment of about five feet. One other car jumped the track, but did not leave the crossties, nor were any of its occupants hurt Following is a list of the wounded: Capt. Hollowell, arm hurt; 1st Lt. Bain, head wound; F. A. Smith, scalp wound; J. M. Scott, dangerously injured in-ternally; J. M. Baker, rib broken and injured internally; J. P. Guinn, internal injuries and head wound; H. E. Perkins, wounded in the head; J. H. Hill, slightly hurt on one leg; Logan Howell, W. B. Birch, Chas. Miller, C T. Taylor, J. T. Edmundson, John Staughter, J. O. Carroll and John

Cox, slight head wounds; R. G. Powell, hand crushed; J. A, Wyatt, face When the accident was first discovered there was a regular panic among those of the Guard who were fortunate enough to escape and as too fast running on the part of the engineer had been noticed, there were serious apprehensions that he would be lynched, and possible he would have been, but for the interposition of Cols Cotton, of the First Regiment, and Jones, of the Second Reginent. As it was, the engineer was placed under Guard and the engine was dispatched to Asheville for surgical assistance. Surgeon Spicer, of the Goldsboro Company, and Surgeon Stevens, of the Sampson Light Infantry, who went on the second section, which was following a tew miles in rear of the first, were of course pretty soon at the scene of action and rendered invaluable services. The writer of this was ordered by Capt. Morrison to repair to the scene of the wreck and render any services which might be necessary. The distance was about half a mile and the sun was intensely hot and being considerably overcome by heat, fatigue and the sight of the wounded, I soon succumbed and fainted. I had seen what was coming and endeavored to avert it, but to no purpose. Dr. Stevens rendered me valuable services, as did others, of the guard, and I was soon restored to consciousness. With the exception cited, there was no accident of any kind to our company. Of course the accident to our Goldsboro comrades has thrown a damper over things and the Guard are not in as good spirits as they otherwise would be. It is thought that the wounded man, Scott, will not recover. the railroad authorities and the says, in commenting upon the accident, William Lowe, was some time ago discharged from the employ of the road for reckless running and was reinstated for this special occasion." Camp Scales is situated about a mile and a half from the town of Asheville, most encircling it. The death of Gen. Grant has been announced in camp and in consequence the colors at regimental and brigade beadquarters have been placed at ball mast as a token of respect.

Fearing I will tire you and your readers, I will refrain from writing more at present, but will possibly let you hear from us again. Until then, W. L. I. Yours,

Now is the season for painting your to save money.

The grand jury beg leave to report that they have carefully and diligently inquired into all business brought before them, and have only granted true bilis when the evidence was sufficient to warrant their doing so. Several cases of misdemeanor have been brought to their attention, but for want of satisfactory evidence, no presentments were made

A committee of three members of the grand jury, including the foreman, visted the Poor House and House of Cor rection, and they find pleasure in being able to report the premises and buildings in most admirable condition, and the management all that could be desired. They made a careful examination of each department, which we found to be scrupulously clean and comfortable, and the inmates well cared for and satisfied. Many patients and prisoners were examined as to treatment, food and clothing, and all Moonlight Excursion were loud in their praise of the Superintendent, whom the committee believe to be the right man in the right place, kind, thoughtful and polite, but firm and conscientious in the discharge of duty. His store room we found well supplied with good and wholesome food, which we were informed is we'll prepared and served in sufficient quantities to please all. Evidences of taste and system are to be seen, while the grounds give an air of comfort, and reflect much credit upon the county. The grand jury also visited the jail, which they found in a cleanly condition, and as comfortable as the weather and surroundings will admit of. > The grand jury beg leave to call your Honor's attention to the uncomfortable room set apart for their use, as being so hot and so unpleasant from its surroundings that they were compelled to take frequent recesses during each day's session; and they further complain that the privacy of their proceedings is greatly impaired by the location of the room.
