What Senator Sherman is looking for may occur. Foreign or domestic complications may arise; the president may be indiscreet; the popular fancy may be drawn in new directions, and the Republican party may gain strength from any of these things. But we think there is little likelihood of its thus profiting, and Democrats may congrat ulate themselves that leading Republi cans, by once more returning to questions dead in the minds of a vast majority of voters, have confessed that their party really lacks any living prin ciple upon which it dares to go before the people. With a reasonable degree of p. udence at Washington and elsewhere among Democrats, we conclude Magnolia Balm is the charm- that the work of disintegration will go er that almost cheats the on in the Republican party of the country, and that the still more im portant work of establishing thorough good feeling between the people of all sections will gain rather than lose by the course Senator Sherman and some other Republicass have taken in the campaign.
