The Daily Review.
WOMAN.

Give us that grand word "woman" once again, And let's have done with "lady."

One's a term, Full of fine force—strong, beautiful and firm, Fit for the noblest use of tongue or pen— And one's a word for lackeys.

One suggests The mother, wife and sister, one the dame Whose costly robe, mayhap, gave her the name. One word upon its own strength leans and rests; The other minces tiptoe.

Who would be The "perfect woman" must grow brave of heart And broad of soul, to play her troubled part Well in life's drama. While each day we see The "perfect lady," skilled in what to do, And what to say, grace in each tone and act ('Tis naught in school, but needs serve native tact), Yet narrow in her mind as in her shoe. Give the first place, then, to the nobler phrase, And leave the lesser word for lesser praise.

—ELLA WHEELER WILSON.

Court Etiquette.

Adam Badeau in an article in the Sun on "The Court," of St. James describes the arrangement of the royal personages in the reception room. "The Queen," he says "and not the Prince of Wales, is at the centre of the line; next are the ladies of her family, and then the heir apparent and his brothers, or any royal strangers. Her Majesty wears a black gown and a widow's cap. Over the cap is usually placed a small diamond crown, while the ribbon of the Garter and similar orders are on her breast as well as the Koh-i-noor and other jewels worthy of a queen. The Princesses of Wales and the other princesses are in full dress—petticoats, trains, feathers and all—Behind them stand their attendants, "male and female," as the court circles sometimes disdainfully describes them. When the diplomatic corps has made its reverences and taken its place, the English ladies follow, and as each enters the throne-room, with her train over her arm, two gentlemen in waiting seize the appendage and spread it behind her, till it hangs like a peacock's drooping tail. Then the lady, handing her card to a lord in waiting, passes up toward the Lord Chamberlain, and stands till she pronounces her name. Upon hearing it she prostrates herself before the queen so that one knee nearly or quite touches the floor. If it is a presentation, her Majesty extends her hand with the back upward, and the recipient, placing her own hand transversely under that of the sovereign, raises the royal extremity to her lips. When the lady is of the rank of an Earl's daughter the Queen bends slightly forward to kiss the cheek of her subject, and the homage is complete; but there have been occasions when the novice was insufficiently instructed in advance and kisses the monarch in return, very much to the disgust of her Majesty and the horror-struck amazement of the courtier. After the obeisance to the Queen, another must be made to every one in the royal circle in turn, the depth of the courtesy being graduated according to the rank of the personage; and as the last prostration is performed, and the subject raises to her watchful lords or gentlemen, as skillful as the first, catch up her train and throw it once more over her train as she slowly stumbles backward out of the room, having been at court."

Augustus Comes to Grief.

Young Augustus de Jones and Miss Clara Brussels never speak any more as they pass by. A few weeks ago the world looked bright to the young couple. Augustus loved Clara and Clara loved Augustus. The young man admired the old man Brussels, respected old Mrs. Brussels, and was on intimate terms with the house dog. A few days ago the young man received an invitation to go with the family on a nutting expedition, which he promptly accepted. The rosy old family carriage was comfortably filled, with Mr. and Mrs. Brussels on the front seat and Augustus and his darling on the back one. The day was a delicious one, with the warm mellow glow of the Indian summer air bringing a delicious languor to the soul. Arriving on the ground, they soon found there were plenty of nuts, but how to get them was the question. Clubs were procured, however, and the work of pelting the nuts from the trees commenced. The first attempt of young Augustus was a success. He drew back to throw with such force as to draw an agonizing shriek from the old lady. Finally all the clubs were lodged in the trees, and it was decided that it was necessary to climb the monarchs of the forest if any nuts were procured. Of course this meant work for Augustus. He showed a willingness to try, and was so bewildered by a thankful glance from Clara's blue eyes that he promptly commenced the ascent of a black oak under the impression that it was a hickory.

"That young man will do some mischief yet," said old Mrs. Brussels, who was still indignant.

And then Augustus attempted the explanation that he had intended climbing the oak and then jumping over from there on the hickory, which, as the limbs were about forty feet apart, would have been a very heroic feat indeed. The young man finally succeeded in reaching one of the branches of a hickory and dislodging a few consumptive looking nuts, one of which took Clara on the tip of her angelic nose, just as she looked up to see Augustus, retiring behind her short order. The old man lay down on the grass and roared, when, just as he turned over, one of the heaviest clubs that lodged in the branches took him across the mouth knocking out two of his teeth and changing his laugh to a roar of anguish.

"I knew he would do some mischief," shrieked the old woman, rushing to the relief of her husband and gazing reproachfully up in the tree just in time to receive a big hickory nut in the eye. "Clara," shouted the old man, "lead up the horse and let us go home and leave that infernal young fool up in the tree."

Clara, with a heart swelling with indignation toward her lover, did as she was bid, when, just as the old horse came under the tree, poor Augustus, who knew nothing of the damage he was doing, rained down a perfect avalanche of clubs and hickory nuts and started the old horse on a run.

"Got all you want down there?" cheerfully shouted young Augustus from the upper branches.

"Come down, you contumacious idiot, and see!" shouted old man Brussels, with a gleam of war in his eye.

"What's the matter?" asked the bewildered young man, as he reached the ground. Old man Brussels started toward him, but was held by the women folks, who briefly and sternly explained the situation to him in such a way as to let him know that all was at an end.

"Mr. Jones," said Clara, as he turned away to hunt his coat (and ah, how cold the words sounded after being so lately called "dear Augustus!") "you are about to lose your handkerchief."

But poor Augustus well knew that his handkerchief was in his coat pocket, and Clara would have known better had not her eyes been swollen with pain.

Clara now has young Smith for her steady company. The new gallant laughed heartily when told of De Jones' misfortunes. "He doesn't understand nutting," Clara," said he, "I will go to the woods to-morrow and bring you all you want." He accomplished the feat by hiring a buggy and buying a bushel for a dollar of a farmer's boy.—Chicago Tribune.

Rescued from Death.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with BLEEDING OF LUNGS followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALMSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to get well, and to day I feel better than for three years."
