A Celebrated Case.

The audience at the Opera House last night was the largest that has yet appeared during the engagement of the Arnot Company. The military drama, "A Celebrated Case," was the attrac tion, and in its presentation the company fully maintained the prestige it had already gained. It is needless, where the merits of a company are so well established, to go into particulars. Suffice it to say that the drama was presented in an exquisite manner; the dressing of the several characters was superb, and the acting realistic. The company has fairly and honorably won the esteem of Wilmington theatregoers, and this without the aid of the catch-penny clap-trap by which many meretricious performances are palmed off upon a credulous public. Their in port, but there are several sailing efforts have given universal delight, vessels loading with cotton and naval and we know that, would other engagments permit, crowded houses would greet them for a much longer time than the present week. The actors and actresses have established the fact that they are fully equal to the task of presenting either tragedy or comedy with skill, taste and effect. There is one fact connected with their engagement here which is worthy of notice, and which must be a source of pleasure to every member of the company, and that is: They grow in popular favor and esteem with every appearance. "Fun on the Bristol" will be given to night and, as a matter of course, every seat will be
