The rat threatens to be as destructive in the Neilgherries in India as the rabbit is in Australia. The hills are over run by them. The fields of the ryots are honeycombed by them. On estates bundreds of tes trees have been unrooted by them, and bushels of coffee may begathered that has been picked by them. Growers of polatoes and vegetables have had their crops destroyed by them, and residents and visitors have experiedced what a pest they have become in the houses. It is suggested that the breeding of such birds as the prey upon rats, should be encouraged.

A recent number of an English military magazine contained an article on the West Point Academy.
