MR. DAVIS' RELEASE. The Baltimore Herald published on Sunday six columns of recent important nterviews_with Ex-President Jefferson Davis. Some portions of this were sent out by the Associated Press on Saturday night. We copy here from he Herall that portion of the interview which relates to Mr Davis' reease from confinement at Fortress Monroe and the manner in which it vas prought about. which is as fol-

Mr. Davis and his family are warm in their praise of the late John W Garrett, and c pfirmed Mr. Garrett's statement, made before his death, of how he secured Mr. Davis' release from imprisonment at Fortress Monroe, which is as follows:

Mr. Garrett stated that on one occaden Mr. Russell, a distinguished lawer of Wheeling, W. Va., who had been in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Umpany's employ, and who had been r delegate to the Charleston Democrat-e National Convention, came to his flice at Camden Station and sent in us card. At that time he was engaged with a large delegation, which kept Mr Russell waiti g for an hour and a halt. In time he went out to meet Mr Russell, who introduced him to a lady heavily veiled, who proved to be Mrs. Jefferson Davis. Mr. Garrett apolo waiting, and said if he had known the lady was present he would have been more prompt. Mrs Davis told Mr. Garrett that she had just arrived from

Fortress Monroe, where her husband was closely confined in a casemate, and that unless he was released he would ment to man, as animals are." the Secretary for her. She desired Mr Garrett to go to Washington with ber. better remain here until I go first."-She promised to do as requested and remained with the late John S. Git-

Mrs Davis in her interview with Mr farrett laid before him all the difficulties she had to contend with to secure her husband's release. Among other things she said Mr. McCullouch, the Secretary of the Treasury, on his way from Fortress Monroe, had said that Mr. Garrett could count on him to aid aim in his efforts to obtain Mr Davis' release. Mr. Garrett started for Washington immediately, and upon his ar rival there called upon Mr. McCulloch, and after stating the nature of his business told him that he intended to see Secretary Stanton about obtaining Mr. Davis' release. Mr McCulloch was thunderstruck with amazement and said it was preposterous to think of doing anything with Stanton. Mr. Garrett told Mr. McCulloch what Mrs. Davis had said about his proffered aid. which he attempted to deny or evade Finally it was agreed that they should go over and lay the subject before the Attorney General. Mr. Stansbury -Upon their arrival at his office Mr. McCulloch was about to introduce Mr Garrett to Mr. Stansbury, but the latter stopped him by saying that he remembered Mr. Garrett very well, as they had met before Mr. McCulloch then narrated the nature of their business, to which Mr. Stansbury replied that he had seen stranger things than that done, and could see now no object tion to the plan proposed. After talk ing the matter over Mr. Garrett, contrary to the advice of his associates. said he would go and see Secretary Stanton, who was at home sick and. it was said, could not be seen by any one. He told the gentlemen to wait for his return, as he intended to see Stanton.

who, they said would be furious at the mention of Davis' name. Mr. Garrett drove to Stanton's house, sent up his card and was admitted. He found the War Secretary lying on a lounge, too id to rise up to greet him.

Mr. Garrett stated his business, when Stanton grew furious. He told Mr. Stanton that two of the Cabinet officers favored the release of Mr Davis upon his executing a sufficient bond, and President Johnson was waiting to receive the order from his War Secretary before executing it. Mr. Garrett pleaded for Mr. Davis, whom he "regarded as a dying man, and stated that the
