Intered at the Postoffice at Wilmington, N.C. as second-class matter.

Among some of the more liberal churches of New York, like that of he Rev. Robert Collyer, as well as in several congregations quite as orthodox as Dr. Heber Newton's, a remarkable movement is on foot, and has actually made substantial progress, to replace the regular pulpit orators for the warmer months of the year with laymen of celebrity, and even with laymen who have heretofore been accustomed to speak over the footlights. The idea is as interesting as it is novel. A syndicate of churches is to be formed and a syndicate of vacation "preachers" to be engaged. The present plan is said to contemplate six congregations, six lay preachers, and a six weeks' term for their engagement, each to speak once to each of the congregations. The surprising part of it all and the feature of the plan that shows the widest departure from current ideas on the relations of the pulpit and the stage, is the fact that Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Steele Mackaye and Richard Mansfield are discussed as probably four of the six speakers.

There seems to be a greater rush than usual now for official positions. The coming annual report of the civil service commission," says one of the commissioners, "will no doubt open the eyes of the general public, snare. If it were possible to satisfy of the town. 6,000 people with 4,000 places without disturbing the incumbents, then the civil service would be a great institution. We cannot turn out any of the ins, and we are villified if we do not provide for all the outs. We have plenty of good people on our registers, but they are not called for. The appointing power will make no removals, and therefore certifications are being made very slowly. The applicants do not grow weary. They still pour in from all sides and stand their examination. They pass and are so notified. Then they confidently expect to be appointed, for have they not passed creditable examinations? At the end of a year the great majority of them have not been provided for all diseases of a chronic nature, as and their names are stricken from malarial poisoning, ailments of the the register. So the wheels of the service grind along, mangling the the use of an alterative remedy is budding hopes of those desiring to indicated. draw government wages. Since the organization of the commission 1.259 people been appointed from its certifications. Of this number about one in eight have been women. Under the latest apportionment the women will be more fairly treated .-The number opportioned among the States is 2,000, 500 of whom must be women. At the present rate of casualties in the departments, deaths, resignations, dismissals, &c., I am inclined to think that many years will have elaped before another apportionment is necessary. It is gratifying, however, that no matter how slow the appointments may be under this apportionment the women will have a fair share of them. The District of Columbia is allowed two women under the apportionment of Maryland. It will be a long time before their turn comes. Our next annual report will show how many people have tried the examination, how many passed and how many have been appointed. Such a statement will show that the civil service has almost assumed the nature of a lottery enterprise. The chance of appointment is about one in two thousand."
