Biggs Found Guilty.
Daniel Biggs, the young colored man who was on trial yesterday for burglary, has been found guilty. The case was given to the jury late last night and they were looked up and the Court adjourned. At 9 o'clock this morning the jury came into Court and a verdict of guilty was pronounced by the foreman. Judge Meares sentenced the prisoner to be hung on Tuesday, May 8th.

Personal.
Mr. L. Vollers, of Point Caswell, is in the city to-day.

Mr. W. W. Shepherd, of Elizabethtown, at one time a resident of this city, was here to-day.

Mr. Luther Blue, of Mr. Sol Bear's wholesale house in this city, has recently returned from an extended trip to South Carolina. He tells us that the rain along the line of the W. C. & A. R. R. has been very heavy and that a good deal of low land is under water.

Charged with Bigamy.
Tom Smith, one of the defendants at the Mayor's Court this morning, proved to be one Thos. Andrews, and he is held on the serious charge of bigamy. Some years ago he married in Brunswick county and afterwards deserted his wife, came to this city, and last June was married again. Wife No. 1 applied to Mayor Fowler to-day and a warrant was issued for his arrest. He will be heard to-morrow on this new charge.

Spring Clothing.
I. Shrier, at No. 16 North Front street, is now receiving daily the handsomest line of Spring and Summer Clothing ever brought to this city, and the prices of them will be from 25 to 33 per cent. lower than any other house in the State, and under no circumstances will we be undersold. I. Shrier, the Old Reliable Clothier, 16 North Front street, Purcell House; sign of the Golden Arm.

On Good Friday the Holy Communion will be administered at 11 a. m. and at 8 p. m., in the English service, confirmation will take place.

Easter Sunday morning the Holy Communion will be administered in English.

Gone to Canada.

Our friends in Raleigh have a big sensation on hand for to-day. It is no more or less than the biggest sort of a big sensation. The State National Bank has gone under and the President, Mr. Cross, and the Cashier, Mr. White, have gone up, too, towards Canada. It is presumed. The bank's money has gone, too. It is said that $300,000 of it has taken unto itself wings and flown away, but whether it went with the President and Cashier, or antedated their flight, is not known here as yet. It is a very serious and a very sad disaster and we are truly and heartily sorry for it.

Maj. Stedman in the West.

The Asheville Sun, in a recent issue has this to say of our distinguished townsman, Lt. Gov. Stedman:

Charles M. Stedman is a self-made man. He was born of a poor and humble parentage. He has climbed the ladder of fame and fortune by his own effort, commencing on the lowest rung. He is the architect of his own fortune. He owes nothing to name and the inherited qualities of name and heart, which have won him so enviable a place among his people. Born of the people and bred among them, he is in full sympathy with them. The poorest and the humblest may feel at home within the radiance of his genial and kindly nature. Stedman is a generous, liberal, free hearted nature. Charity is one of his crowning virtues. He helps the poor; oft feeds the hungry; clothes the ragged; gives money to the penniless; and, with open hand and purse, is ready to show his active sympathy for suffering humanity. Below we present a well written sketch of his career, which is as an inspiration and an incentive to every poor and ambitious boy in the State.

Ye Ancient Pirates.

There is a chapter of ancient history relative to the North Carolina coast which is but little known, yet which is of intense interest. We refer to that relative to the piratical operations of the early part of the 18th century. Some references have been made of late to the exploits of Edward Teach, or Blue Beard, as he was known, and a few days recently the Star stated that he was attacked off Cape Fear and he and 40 of his men carried into Charleston. This is a mistake. Teach's record of infamy was not made on the South Carolina coast but on that of this State, although he probably operated all along the Atlantic seaboard and also in the West Indies and on the Spanish Main. The narrative of his piratical deeds and exploits is incomplete, but yet such as it is, it is a matter pertaining mainly to the history of North Carolina. All of those who have written partial or complete histories of the State refer to the exploits of this desperado. He was a reality, and not a myth, and it is probable that the old fairy tale of Blue Beard had its origin in the Black Beard of the North Carolina coast, as it is known that Teach had thirteen wives, he having married his last in North Carolina.

The best and most complete account of the piratical exploits of Edward Teach, or Thache, as it is written in the earlier records of the province, is found in Hawks' History of North Carolina. He was born in Bristol, England, and his first appearance on the scene was about the year 1706.

He served first in a privateer fitted out in Jamaica, during the war of the English with France and Spain, where he distinguished himself by his daring courage. In 1806 he turned pirate in connection with one Hornsgold, and cruised between the island of New Providence and the continent. Having captured a sloop Hornsgold gave him command of the prize and soon after he fell in with a large French Guinean, bound for Martinique, which he captured. He armed her with 40 guns and transferred to her his flag, giving to her the name of Queen Anne's Revenge. Dr. Hawks furnishes us with the following account of Teach's exploits and of the close of his sanguinary career:

His flag was hoisted on board of a ship of 40 guns, a vessel which, with her armament and stores, he could carry into no harbor on the coast but that of Beaufort, and he had a crew of 100 men. His squadron consisted of six vessels, and Vane, Bonnet and Worley were his chief captains. In the month of May, 1718, Teach, cruising off the bar of Charleston, captured a ship having on board a passenger Samuel Wragg, one of the council of South Carolina. He robbed this gentleman of $8,000 in specie and then impudently sent four of his men into Charleston with a message to Gov. Johnson, demanding a chest of medicine, and accompanied with the assurance that should it not be sent, he would behead Mr. Wragg and all of the other passengers. To save their lives the chest was sent.

After amassing a large amount of plunder, he returned to North Carolina, determined to despoise his followers and live on the fruits of his villainy. His first step was to go to the house of Governor Eden, with twenty of his men, and take advantage of the King's proclamation of pardon. This he did and obtained the Governor's certificate. A court of admiralty soon after sat at Bath, when Teach, who never held a commission nor took a lawful prize, with consummate impudence procured the condemnation of a sloop which he or some of his followers had piratically taken at sea and sent in. He now sat down on the land to riot in his ill-gotten wealth, and for the thirteenth time married a wife—a young woman who probably was not very inquisitive as to how many of her predecessors were living.

Restless and roving in disposition, however, he could not long remain on shore, and when tired of dissipation on land, he resolved to diversify his pleasures by a little more robbery and murder at sea.

He accordingly went on a cruise and soon returned with his plunder in the shape of a French ship, laden with a valuable cargo of sugar and cocoa. The lie which he told, and to which four of his men swore, was so gross that it seems scarcely credible it could have been listened to for a moment. He stated that he had found a vessel at sea, abandoned by the crew, tho', when brought in, she bore no marks of injury from tempests, or otherwise, necessitating such abandonment. He libeled her, however, in the court of admiralty, on the oath of the four men alluded to, adjudged her to be a lawful prize to the captors. The ship (on the ground that she was unseaworthy) was burned.

After the condemnation of the French ship and cargo, Teach remained in Pamlico River, trading with the planters, and with other vessels that came in—exchanging his share of the plunder for such commodities as he needed and evincing, in his traffic, a total want of honesty. This roused the resentment of the people, and they furnished unequivocal evidence of their opinion as to his true character, and of his story of finding the French ship, by applying to Spotswood, then Governor of Virginia, to request the British naval officer in command on his station to send a force into the waters of Carolina and take the pirate. It is intimated that they adopted this course because Eden, their own Governor, was not, in their view, sufficiently prompt in affording them redress.

Captain Ellis Brand was the naval officer commanding in the waters of Virginia; and he, acting in concert with Governor Spotswood, fitted out two sloops, and placing them under Lieutenant Robert Maynard, ordered him in pursuit of Teach. Spotswood at the same time offered, by proclamation, a reward of one hundred pounds for the apprehension of Teach, fifteen pounds each for any of his officers, and ten pounds per man for his crew. Maynard sailed from James River in November, 1718, and four days after crossed Ocracoke bay and steered for Pamlico River. It had been the effort to keep Maynard's expedition a secret, and take the pirate by surprise; but Teach had discovered it, and was prepared to defend himself, with his crew of twenty-five desperadoes. As Maynard came within gun shot, he received Teach's fire, so that the engagement commenced on his side. Maynard then stood directly for his vessel, but unfortunately grounded, near enough for Teach to hail him, and with horrid imprecations, to let him know that he would neither give nor take quarter. The fight thus became one of predetermined extermination, and was desperate on both sides. By one broadside Maynard lost twenty men, when he promptly resolved that the contest should be finished, hand to hand, at close quarters. To effect this, he resorted to the stratagem of sending his men below, with instructions to be ready to appear on the first signal, prepared for close quarters. As he anticipated, Teach, perceiving his deck clear, ordered his crew to board. The moment they touched his deck, Maynard called his men, and then the slaughter commenced.

The two commanders made for each other, and discharged their pistols without effect; they then drew their dirks, and alike between officers and men on both sides, the blows of death were dealt with fearful rapidity on a deck soon made slippery with blood. At last Teach fell, exhausted with the wounds he had received; of the seventeen pirates who had boarded the King's vessel, Teach with nine others were killed outright, and the other eight were so wounded that they begged for and received mercy. Maynard then immediately attacked Teach's vessel containing the residue of the pirates who had remained on board of her. The officer in command had ordered a desperate negro, who with a fire-brand stood ready, to apply it to the magazine and blow the vessel up the moment she was boarded. One broadside was all that she discharged, in returning which the commander of the pirates would appear to have been killed, and the crew yielded; though it was with difficulty the negro was prevented from blowing up the vessel, even after he knew that he who had ordered it was dead.

Teach was now beyond the reach of human punishment; he had gone to a more fearful tribunal than that of man. Maynard caused his head to be severed from his body, and hanging it at the end of his bowsprit, sailed up to the town of Bath, where he landed his men and remained some little time for their refreshment and recovery. He then proceeded to his station in Virginia, taking with him his pirate prisoners, and still carrying, in advance as before, the head of their brave but villainous leader hanging at his bowsprit. A court of admiralty there soon disposed of them, and thirteen of them followed their chief to the judgment seat of eternity.

Feast of the Passover.

The Jewish Feast of the Passover, one of the most solemn of all the observances in the Jewish calendar, began yesterday evening at sunset, and will continue for seven days, the first and last of which are always kept in strict accordance with the Mosaic ordinance. The Passover commemorates the miraculous departure of the Israelites from Egypt. It is always observed on the 14th day of the Hebrew month Nissan.
