The Daily Review.
THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1888.
IN CONGRESS YESTERDAY.

SENATE.
WASHINGTON, June 13.—Mr. Hale called up Mr. Morgan's resolution as to the fisheries treaty, and proceeded to address the Senate on that subject.
Mr. Hale declared that the fishermen would agree to no surrender in this matter; that his voice was all one way, and was against the treaty. He gave it as his conviction that the desire of Canada to have the American market open free to their fish was at the bottom of all the trouble.
The District of Columbia appropriation was then passed and the Senate resumed consideration of the resolution offered by Mr. Stewart, calling for a statement of the sale of bonds since April, 1888.
The motion to refer to the Committee on Finance was rejected. The discussion for some time took a political turn. The resolution was then adopted without modification and without division.
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.
The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Tariff Bill.
Mr. McMillin, of Tennessee, moved to place upon the free list bags of jute for grain. A long debate resulted upon this motion, into which a good deal of politics entered.
The motion was agreed to.

ON A BURNING BRIDGE.

Narrow Escape of the Charlotte Bound Train.
(Charlotte Chronicle.)
The Charlotte bound passenger train on the Air Line road, due here yesterday morning at 5 o'clock, had a narrow escape from total destruction at South Tiger river, where it ran upon a bridge, a portion of which had been burned away. The bridge over South Tiger is a very high structure, the track is laid upon it being 120 feet above the ground. It is approached by trestle work on either side, and sparks from a passing engine set fire to the northern end of the bridge, sometime during Monday night. The fire had been burning for perhaps a couple of hours and had destroyed thirty feet of the bridge on the Charlotte side when the morning passenger train from Atlanta came thundering up. Coming toward Charlotte the bridge is approached around a sharp curve, which prevents the engineer, from his seat on the right hand side of the cab, from seeing the bridge until he is almost upon it. On this occasion Capt. Ed. Roseborough was conductor and Engineer John Pettus was in the cab.
The train approached the bridge at the usual speed, thirty miles an hour, and when within a few hundred yards of it, Engineer Pettus noticed a heavy smoke ahead, which he concluded was from a burning brush pile, such as is to be seen along the road almost every day. When his engine forged around the curve he lost sight of the smoke, but just as he emerged and the pilot threw a shadow over the timbers of the trestle, he saw that what he had thought to be a burning brush pile was something far more serious.
The bridge was burning away, and his engine was upon it!
There was but little time for thought. A few more strokes of the driving rod would carry the whole train, with a mass of blazing timbers, down through a sheer descent of 120 feet to the ground below. It required nerve to leap from the engine, but it required greater nerve to remain on it. Pettus remained at his post. He reversed his engine and brought every brake to bear upon the wheels with all the force that was possible. The big drivers of the engine flew backward with lightning like revolutions, streams of fire shot from every brake wheel under the train, there was a succession of rough jolts that threw the passengers from their seats and the train came to a dead halt, with the pilot of the engine within half a car length of the fiery gap. The cold perspiration stood out in great beads on the engineer's forehead as he looked down from his cab into the chasm to the brink of which his train and the people upon it had drawn so closely.

The train was backed from the burning structure and Capt. Roseborough and his crew organized a bucket brigade, and after half an hour's work extinguished the fire and saved the main portion of the bridge. The watchman, whose duty it is to patrol the bridge, was not present, it is said, but came upon the scene while the people were fighting the fire, and seeing the state of affairs he disappeared. The mid night train from Charlotte approached the north side of the bridge shortly afterwards, and a transfer of passengers and baggage was made, the train returning here at 11 o'clock yesterday morning. A large force of workmen was put to work at once reconstructing the trestle, and trains crossed the bridge in the afternoon.
The passengers speak in the highest praise of engineer Pettus, and so appreciative were they of his nerve and bravery, that one of the number, Rev. Mr. Pentacost, started a subscription and the passengers liberally responded. They made up a purse of $40, which Mr. Pentacost presented to engineer Pettus, assuring him that it was "but a slight token of their appreciation of his action, for they felt that he had saved them from a horrible death."
