the eve rests first upon the Rembrandt Peale portraits of George and Martha Washington, contributed by Miss Stokes, gems in their way, superbly engraved, and of surpassing interest now that it is so unusual to discover unpublished portraits of our first President. "The Inauguration of Washington in 1789," by Mrs. Lamb, is a timely as well as a notable paper, and contains much fresh information on a subject soon to be hotly canvassed by writers of every grade in connection with the approaching celebration in New York City. It is unique ly and appropriately illustrated. This magazine, while giving to the public a charmingly readable "Washington number," has not overlooked Christmas. The second paper is by Dr. Prosper Bender on the "Holidays of the French Canadians," and it is well worthy of critical attention. Following, Shirley Carter Hughson writes of "Francis Marion's Grave"; and Prof. E. W. Gilliam contributes a spirited article on "The French Colony in San Do mingo," describing its rise and fall. Then comes an interesting colloquial paper on "The Declaration of Independence," by M. M. Baldwin; J. A. SPRINGER, Washington Portraits by Rembrandt Peale," which is a brief history by the editor of the elegant frontispieces; Colonel Stone's "Trip from New York to Niagara in 1829, Part III., in which he visits and describes the falls, and the country thereabouts with its canal packet Mayor be requested to advertise for accommodations; and Moncure D. Conway has a curious page on the origin of the epithet, "The Father of His Country." Among the short contributions is one from Katharine Armstrong of London, Eng land, on "The Anglo-Americans" an unpublished letter by S. R. Mallory, Secretary of the Confederate Navy, 1861, about the purchase of the ship Trent; a letter from Richpower than has been lost to the eve and Henry Lee in 1782; two unpubas in the same proportion that you lished letters of Washington, and pass that point of increase, will cause other Washingtonians.
