OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Sp. Cor. Daily Review.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 13, '88 Since I last made my bow to the readers of the REVIEW several events of more or less importance sense is more often displayed have occurred. I will not specify; they are known and read of all men. One of them is as conspicuous as the evidences is that some are that iffteen inch shell that exploded well remembered occasion. You recollect that one of the forts on theCapeFear was a little belowOronsly, one and dropped in the yard, as above stated. Miller was telling day, is the Rev. J. B. Perry of South the Church was increased above all who have tried them will wear of this a few days later to a gaping crowd at Laurinburg, one and of the rusties innocently asked, "Did you hear it, Mr. Miller? "Hear it!" he answered, his large eyes still pro- away; don't lie down in desponjecting far out of their sockets, "Great Scott! Was there a man anywhere on the continent of America that didn't hear it?

For a purpose, hereafter to be disclosed, I will intrude upon your readers an allusion to that best remembed event which made Mr. Ben Harrison the President elect and Mr. Grover Cleveland the soon to be ex-President. The well-known proclivity of the self-seeking politician to kneel to the rising sun, and Washington's population is largely of that class, led many to believe that the 'Presi dent, hitherto so popular, would find few so poor as to do him rev erence now that his sun is nearing its western horizon, clouded by defeat. That even his charming wife, and she is charming, would be found less beautiful and would pass into nothingness with the fickle multitude. Such has been the fate of many indeed, most of his prede cessors in their latter days. I well recollect how it was with that ex cellent gentleman. President Pierce, who, let me say, was the peer of the best that have filled that great of fice. In his day of power he was immensely popular, and especially with such as knew him as a man These have never forgotten him, tho' some, true to their selfish in stincts, turned their backs upon him when interest prompted. It was my privilege to meet him very often the house of Mr. Dobbin, Secretary of the Navy, of whom he was especially fond, and I had a chance of comparing him with that thoroughly Chesterfieldian gentleman, and I could only say arcades ambo; each was worthy of the other. His levees were more and more sparsely attended, as the arated, did not recover each other till its close. Mr. Buchanan stood at the President's right and the caller was introduced by him, but he was soon driven from this position and was forced to inaugurate a levee of his own. He stood near the wall, the centre of an admiring and ever increasing crowd, that had to be made to move on by the police in attendance. One old dowager rushed at him and threw her arms about his nečk and might have kissed him had he not dodged: Mr. B. was a that Mr. Buchanan, the rising sun, would be present at the next one, and then what a rush and crush.

All Washington seemed to have turned out. All the available space in the President's house was filled, and such was the jam that women fainted and husbands and wives and gallants and sweethearts, once sep-bachelor, you know. All this time Mr. Pierce stood almost deserted; many passed him without saluting. Discovering Mr. B. they would rush at him, showing a devotion too demonstrative to be sincere. It was a gathering of the eagles around the carcass, as the Psalmist speaks of. Remembering all this, I was curious to see how it was with Mr. Cleveland. On Thanksgiving Day be received a brigade of district militia, and to the honor of the people be it said, there was as great anxiety manifested to see him and in his administration. His receptions are as eagerly attended as ever and there is every disposition now to do him honor. When Mr. Hayes was nearing his end there was a general absence of regret, and the pious Hannibal Hamlin "thanked in the White House had but three weeks more to stay. By the way, I will mention a little business that has never been in print. A friend of mine, who, as a member of Congress, took a very active part in seating Mr. Hayes, was in the city on business some time after the inauguration, and called to see him. Later I met him and asked what he thought of the President, "Well," he answered, Mr. Hayes looked to me like he knew that the Presidency had been stolen for him, and he didn't want to see any of the thieves. But I didn't intend to let my pen run away with me in this fashion when I took it up. It was my purpose to tell you of some North Caro lina people I have lately met, which, with the REVIEW, whose editor, it is commonly believed, closes his
