MONDAY, DEC. 24, 1888. OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(Sp. Cor. Daily Review.) WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 20, '88.

I wonder how many of the readers of the REVIEW have ever reflected recall the past and to picture to the Kidney Disease, Dizziness, Colds, mind the scenes and incidents of the Loss of Appetite. Fevers, Chills. long ago. Scientists tell us that its Blocthes, Pimples, Pain in Back, Palseat is at the base of the brain, and pitation of Heart and all other disthat the things that we see, hear or eases caused by disordered liver, touch, all our impressions, indeed, stomach and kidneys, the first great no matter through which of the cause of all fatal diseases. How important it is that this mental gallery, which we are always to carry about with us, should be hung 'round with pleasing pictures, painted by the finger of love, that malice, hatred and uncharitableness, no pictures there.

'Oh thou untameable conscience thou that never flatterest-thou that never leavest us to slumber or to sleep. 'Tis thou that barrest against us the future, that shuttest | mised to be present in full character. out from us the present and knittest the everlasting chain that binds us to the rock and vulture of the past.'

But this reads more like a sermon than a newspaper letter, and my excuse is that this is the season when memory will assert herself, and, with anticipation, takes possession of the household. What Santa Claus will bring is uppermost in the juvenile mind, while what Santa Claus once brought fills that of the senior; and, with the remembrance, comes trooping in the whole line of Christmases, beginning with the happy days of childhood when life was fresh and "the world was all before us where to choose," and Santa Claus was our patron saint and the most glorious and best be-loved of any in the calendar, and actually came down the chimney and filled our stockings.

"When nature pleased, for life itself And the heart promised what the fancy drew.

And in the train came back, also, the forms and faces of those who were with us in those happy days. They came, some from distant land and some from the city of the dead, but all with the loving looks and MAS GOODS now on display at happy faces that they then wore, and we thank God that the power to remember gives additional proof that the soul is immortal.
