THE DAILY REVIEW

VOL XIII. WILMINGTON, N. C., MONDAY, APRIL 8, 1889. NO 84.

A terrific fire raged in Savannah on Saturday night and before it could be checked it had burned through half a mile of the most prosperous section of the city and entailed a loss of from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. The latter figures are given in a special in the New York Herald. It is probable that the insurance will not be more than two thirds of the loss. We collate some particulars from specials in yesterday's Charleston News and Courier:

SAVANNAH, April 6.—Midnight.—A round million of Savannah property is in embers and ashes at this mid night hour, and the most disastrous fire which has ravaged this city is still raging. Starting right in the business heart of the town, the flames spread rapidly East and West and cut a fiery swath diagonally across five blocks of stores and residences.

More than eighty business firms, families and real estate owners share in the loss. All manner of household effects, snatched hastily from the homes of rich and poor, fill the streets and squares on both sides of the path of the still glowing coals. Just at dusk last evening, perhaps fifteen minutes before 7 o'clock, a clerk in Daniel Hogan's dry goods store, at Broughton and Barnard streets, attempted to light the gas in one of the front windows. The taper touched a curtain and in an instant the window was ablaze. Powder could not have flashed up more quickly. A mass of laces and ladies' wear filled the windows. All of this was in flames before the clerk could tear the curtain from its hangings. A passer-by on the sidewalk, thinking he could assist in putting out a mimic fire at that stage, smashed in the glass with his cane. In rushed a gust of wind, which was blowing strong from the Northwest. The draft carried the flames from the window to a shelf. Down this the fire ran almost as fast as an electric current. The most remarkable fact was the incredible rapidity with which the fire spread at the start.

Thirty five men, girls and boys were employed in Hogan's. The first and only alarm these had was the blaze of light which came with the suddenness of a flash of lightning. Those on the first floor rushed for the door, not stopping even to pick up their hats and bonnets. S. Golinski, a salesman, who was the last one out, says that the first intimation he had of danger was the sheet of light which flooded the building. He was down in the basement and rushed up in time to see the last girl escaping out the Broughton street door. This door was encircled with fire when he reached it and he was blistered in dashing out. By this time all the first floor was wrapped in flames, which were leaping up the broad stairs to the upper stories. In three minutes after the fire started every floor was enveloped, and the flames were bursting from the windows and roofs.

In fifteen minutes Hogan's building was completed gutted. A thousand and roofs in the residence section were imperilled, but there was danger nearer at hand. Adjoining the Hogan building on the east was Douglass & Co's crockery house, and next to that two two story brick buildings. When the roof of the tall store fell in, flames broke from the crockery store, and a moment later Mrs. P. Cohen's store, on the southwest corner of Barnard and Broughton, was burning.

For five minutes more men wondered if the handsome home of the Odd Fellows, a beautiful four story brick hall, would escape, but it did not. By twenty minutes after 7 it was on fire in a half dozen places. All that the firemen could do was of no avail. On this fine structure were two towers. From these the sparks rose hundreds of feet in the air.

The Odd Fellows' Hall stood on the north side of Telfair square. To the south was another house for three hundred feet; more than a square acre of open ground intervened. Had the night been calm, the desolation would not be a tenth of what it is, but with sheets of fire sweeping out a hundred feet some times and with a shower of sparks, which made a livid canopy, so lurid and yet so dense that the moon could not be seen through it, falling a mile away, the wonder is that the blackened wake which the scourge left does not reach a mile and a half instead of only half a mile. By 7:30 a dozen buildings were burning fiercely.

The fire was beyond the control of the home department, who have four engines. Every man who could be of any use gave a hand. When the Odd Fellows' building was attacked by the flames a hundred members of the Order rushed up stairs to save what records they could. So fast though did the fire eat up the immense hall that little was saved. The Young Men's Christian Association did not save scarcely anything from its costly fitted up room in this building.

below. For half an hour all interest centered here. An engine was sent to the church, but it got there too late. At any time during the first ten minutes a single bucket of water would have saved the picturesque structure. The church was a massive edifice of granite and marble, completed in 1829 at a cost of $125,000. To day another such could not be rebuilt for $200,000. The spire overhung a beautiful Sunday school chapel of brick, finish four years ago at a cost of $35,000.

For twenty-five minutes after the fire attacked its interior the steeple stood without a quiver. Finally, though, it began to totter, and, after swaying a moment or two, one hundred feet of the spire tottered, the old bell gave its last toll, and down crashed the mass, falling partly on the chapel and partly on some other houses in the rear of Capt. John Flannery's residence on Hull street.

Just about this time the last tower on the Odd Fellows' Hall collapsed and crushed in the roof of Mrs. Savarese's three-story brick tenement. Directly two houses on Hull street were going, and Andrew Hanley's four-story paint store at Whitaker and York streets was just catching. This last mentioned building burned rapidly too.

Across Whitaker street was the handsome arsenal of the Savannah Volunteer Guards battalion. The Guards did everything in their power to save their home. Two hundred men with buckets worked with all their might. Not until 10 o'clock did they give up, and then Hanley's building was in ruins, and half a block on York between Bull and Whitaker was ablaze.

The section burned out embraces half a block of business houses on the south side of Broughton, east of Barnard, and half a block west of Barnard on Broughton. There the burnt track embraces the block on State street between Whitaker and Barnard and half a block west of Barnard. The new Whitefield building on Whitaker and President streets escaped, but south of it is a tract embracing three-fourths of the block on York, between Bull and Whitaker, and half to the block between Whitaker and Barnard on South Broad. Dr. Hopps's residence at the corner of Bull is the only house left until the second street west of Whitaker is reached. The east half of the block between South Broad and Hull, and Bull and Whitaker is gone. At 2 o'clock this morning the city, which was as light as day for six hours, is in darkness, all the electric lights being out, the wires having been broken early in the night.

Are you bilious and dyspeptic? Does your liver sluggish seem? Is your slumber often broken? By a hideous, nightmare dream? Friend, be wise: The Pleasant Pellets Made by Dr. Pierce procure, And they bring you back the sunshine Of good health, you may be sure.

The Albatross Adrift. The steam tug Alex. Jones, which left Southport at 8 o'clock on Saturday morning, under command of Capt. J. J. Adkins, with the dismantled barque Albatross in tow, bound for Norfolk or Boston, returned last night, the barque having broken adrift when about 33 miles Northeast of Frying Pan Lightship. They struck the gale at 9 o'clock on Saturday afternoon and it soon became a hurricane, with a fearful sea running. The barque had been stripped to her lower masts and could not set a stitch of canvas. When last seen she was making quite good weather and drifting towards the Southeast. She was owned by Mr. B. F. Conway, of Brooklyn, N. Y. She was commanded by Mate John Knoppel, of New York, and had as a crew two sailors, whose names we could not ascertain, and Messrs. John H. Grotgen and Chas. Kunold, of this city.

LATER.—It is probable that the barque has been caught and towed into Port Royal, S. C., or that at all events the crew have been saved, as a telegram was received here this afternoon from Mr. Grotgen, at that place, asking for money with which to get home. No particulars as yet.
