THE DAILY REVIEW

VOL. XIII

WILMINGTON, N. C. WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1889.

NO. 286.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

President Harrison's message was read yesterday in both houses of Congress. It is a lengthy document but it is not a very able one. What he has to say, however, he says plainly and succinctly. It gives no new information and makes no new recommendations. It will probably be classed as one of the most ordinary documents on file at the Capitol. There is something about it, however, that is peculiar, and that is in the fact that he is following close upon the heels of what Mr. Cleveland said that the Democratic party proposes to do, just as soon as they get in power again, which will be at the next election. Mr. Harrison's recommendations as to the tariff reform are a weak imitation of those submitted by Mr. Cleveland but they are not by any means as clear and as lucid as could be desired. He wants the tariff reduced and he wants all of the protection possible to home industries. In other words he tries to graft the Democratic doctrine of tariff reduction on the Republican cry of protection. What sort of a hybrid the result will be it is difficult to decide. There is another remarkable endorsement of the Democratic party and the Democratic policy in this paper. The Bland silver bill, which enjoined upon the government the coinage of two million silver dollars every month, was a Democratic measure and was received with howls of derision by the Republican press and the Republican politicians and yet Mr. Harrison is moved to say that "the evil anticipations which have accompanied the coinage and the use of the silver dollar have not been realized." Verily, "the world do move."

Mr. Harrison wants the pension roll increased; of course he does. He doesn't go so far as to recommend a service pension but he thinks that those who left the service sound and healthy, but who have since become incapacitated for hard labor and are in need, should be pensioned. This is in face of the fact that Mr. Harrison recommends that the taxes should be reduced by the abolition of the tax on tobacco and a qualified tax on spirits.

The President speaks of the new Navy begun by Mr. Cleveland, urges continued improvement of important rivers and harbors and bars and hopes (a la Cleveland) that some speedy provision will be made for coast defenses. He urges the enactment of a general bankrupt law and devotes considerable part of his message to Civil Service Reform. Just what position he takes on this last we are utterly unable to inform our readers. They must peruse it themselves. It possesses no meaning for us.

In view of the fact that Mr. Harrison urges a reduction of the taxes on the one hand and an increased pension roll on the other, the following financial statement will be of interest:

The aggregate receipts from all sources for the year were $387,050,058.84 derived as follows: From customs $223,832,741.69; from internal revenue $130,881,513.92; from miscellaneous sources $32,335,803.23. The ordinary expenditures for the same period were $281,996,615.60, and the total expenditures including the sinking fund were $329,579,929.25. The excess of receipts over expenditures was after providing for the sinking fund $57,470,129.50. For the current fiscal year the total revenues, actual and estimated, are $385,000,000, and the ordinary expenditures, actual and estimated, are $293,000,000, making with the sinking fund, a total expenditure of $341,321,116.90, leaving an estimated surplus of $43,678,883.01.

In other words the last fiscal year of the Cleveland administration, which ended with last June, cost the people 293 millions while the first year of Harrison's term will cost 293 millions, just eleven millions more for Harrison's first year than for Cleveland's last. And with this difference: Expenditures for the year which closed with last June are actual, while those for the current year are estimated. No sane man doubts, even without a service pension, that they will foot up at least 300 million at the close of the year.

For good New River oysters, perfectly sound and sweet, our readers would do well to call on Mr. G. G. Aman, in the store in the Northern end of Front street market. He has them fresh every day, open and in the shell. See ad. in this issue and give him a call.

Mr. Gliddon's Lecture.

Rev. Mr. Gliddon's delightful lecture was delivered at the Opera House last night to a small audience. It was a rare literary treat, and was worthy of a much larger attendance. It will be repeated to-night, and at St. Luke's Church. The proceeds are for the benefit of the building fund of the Central Baptist Church.

Open Next Saturday.

We understand that the Purcell House will probably be opened to the travelling public next Saturday afternoon. Some delay has been occasioned by unexpected obstacles but these have all been overcome and the last touches are being put to everything. The lights are being arranged now and there will be electric light everywhere, except in the chambers, where gas will be used.

A Bad Spell.

A merchant's clerk wrote a check for forty dollars, and spelled the numerical adjective "four-ty." His employer directed his attention to the error, with the remark, "you seem to have a bad spell this morning," to which the clerk replied, "sure enough; I've left out the 'h'." Let us hope the clerk will still further amend his orthography, meanwhile, if any suffer from a "bad spell" of headache, superinduced by constipation, ask your druggist for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Entirely vegetable, mild, prompt and effective, and a most efficient remedy for derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

Confirmed.
The favorable impression produced on the first appearance of the agreeable liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs a few years ago has been more than confirmed by the pleasant experience of all who have used it, and the success of the proprietors and manufacturers, the California Fig Syrup Company.

Lost in London.

This is a good play and it will be presented at the Opera House to-night by a good company. In saying this we pin our faith upon the comments of our near neighbors. It has achieved success the past three seasons, solely through giving a meritorious performance that all classes of theatre-goers can appreciate.

The play is a simple story of woman's weakness and man's devotion told in good English with an easily defined plot. It gives, however, a faithful picture of English North country life. The special features introduced are strong and original, making the entertainment doubly interesting and attractive. The special scenery of this production will be placed on the stage as advertised, and a thoroughly satisfactory entertainment is guaranteed.

Scribner's for December.

The holiday number of Scribner's Magazine is an unusually fine issue. It is the best that has yet been issued of the series. There is a larger amount of matter, more illustrations and a greater variety of entertainment than has yet been dished up to the reading public. The frontispiece is a full-page illustration of "Breton Peasants at a Wayside Cross," and the principal contents are "How the Other Half Lives," a study among the tenements and slums of New York. "In the Valley" is continued in chapters XII-XIV; Mrs. Tom's Spree is a well told episode of Summer life; "Evening" is a handsomely illustrated novelette; "The Pardon of St. Anne d'Auray," with numerous and handsome illustrations, tells of Breton life; "Happiness," a pretty little poem, is by Edith Wharton; "A Midwinter Night's Dream" tells of a sudden spasm of waywardness and an early and happy forsaking of the same. "Contemporary American Caricature" is the best thing of the season. It is also profusely illustrated; "Notes of a Sub-Tropic Journey" tells of the quiet life of the natives in the Bahama islands. "At Les Eboulements," a poem, is by Duncan Campbell Scott. "The Age of Worlds," a philosophic disquisition, closes this truly delightful number. Published by Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York, at $3 a year.

Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by expelling impurity from the blood, which is the cause of the complaint. Give it a trial.
