In 1888, it will be remembered, Mr. Cleveland made the memorable investment of $10,000 in the enterprise devoted to his re-election; and there must now be more of the ga.u-bler about him than people usually have supposed, thus to risk, say, about $50,000 more on the chance of getting into Washington again next time. Of course the refusal of such a fancy price for the Red Top prop-erty can only be reasonably ex-plained on the theory that the White House is still in his hopes, and that he doesn't wish anybody to think that it isn't. But Mr. Clevethere must now be more of the ga.uak that it isn't. But Mr. Cleveas always been a plunger. He ambled away the power of the eracy for the sake of his own renomination.
