Maj. Graham Davis, of this city delivered the Memorial Address this year in Goldsboro and we know that it must have been a great treat to all who heard him for there is no man in the South qualified to speak more intelligently of the Lost Cause and its dead heroes than is Maj Daves. The Argus tells us this:

Maj. Daves stepped forward with he grace of the old soldier that he is-and a braver never was-and with the ease and self-possession of able allowance of baggage, to secure an orator and scholar addressed himself at once to the meaning and purpose of the occasion.

His speech was an ornate and beautiful tribute to the heroism of the immortal dead who wore the gray, and to the living heroes, as well, of the "Lost Cause" and to the nobility of the Southern wives and mothers-the inspiration of the Con federate soldiers. He also paid a What is it that makes women more glowing tribute to the no less noble
