Two English Authors." I reached Landon just too late for the annual authors dinner, which is one of the events of the season there, and on this account, and because my time was almost entirely taken up by the law business about which I had gone over, I did not meet as many of the literary men as I should have liked to meet. I saw w good deal, however, of Edmund Gosse, who is one of the most polished and delightful of men, and has always been very kind to me. His house is a sort of center, his Sunday evenings being | don't love me as much as you used delightful occasions where one may nucet a score of writers, sculptors and painters. Occasionally I met him at lunch at his club, where he would get Austin Dobson, who is, like himself, in an official position in Whitehall, and obtains therefrom the substantials of life which enable him to cultivate the muses on something a little better than "oaten reed." Both Dobson and Gosse are directly in line for the lanreateship when it shall fall vacant, though no one knows who will get it. I am indebted to both of them for much personal kindness. Gosse is a good sized, handsome man, of the blonde English type, with the cheeriest face and voice, and wherever he goes it grows warm and comfortable. Dobson is somewhat older. Both of them strike me as being among the most cultured men I ever met. They have English literature at their fingers' ends, and dwell in an atmosphere which is redolent of the masters.—Thomas Nelson Page in Richmond Times.

Stole Busts from a Cemetery. That too ingenious person who stole bronze and marble busts from the cemetery of Montparnasse, touched them up and sold them as effigies of famous heroes, statesmen or orators, has at last bowels, and is the best known rememet with the punishment which his ly for diarrhoa, whether arising lugubrious labors deserved. Moreau, for so the new kind of "resurrection man," to adopt the phrase of Dickens, is ealled, came up before the eighth tribunal of police, and was soon sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

The singular thefts perpetrated by Moreau in the cemetery long passed unperceived. He was accordingly able to make some money by his dismal and deplorable transactions, and it is considered probable that many of his transformed busts now adorn not only the humble homesteads of artisans in Paris, but also the libraries and museums of some provincial towns. On one occasion he is said to have sold the effigy of a worthy professor of the Sorbonne as that of a famous general of the revolution, while on another he passed off the bronze presentment of a departed grocer as that of a Demosthenes.-Paris Cor. London Telegraph.

Rare Fortitude in a Dog.

Many of the sportsmen of Wilmington will perhaps remember Sailor, the fine pointer dog of Mr. J. A. Brown, of Chadbourn. He was an extraordinary hunter and retriever, with almost human tact, and his owner valued him at several hundred dollars. A few days ago this fine dog-was run over by the train at Chadbourn, and his left fore leg was crushed off, leaving a piece of the bone protruding.

Mr. Brown hated to kill his valuable and faithful dog, so he got Dr. A. Mc-Kinnon to amputate the crushed member. When the operation was performed Sailor obeyed the command to lie down, and never even gave a whimper when the work was done, . The poor animal's muscles were contracted with pain, but with a few sympathetic cases from his master he lay perfectly still until the amputation was performed.—Wilmington Messenger.

Full of Enterprise. A boy with a mowing machine called at a house on Second avenue the other day, and asked the woman if she wanted the grass cut.

"Mercy, no!" she replied. "No one cuts grass at this season."

"I'll contract for next spring," continned the boy.

"But-I may be dead by that time." "Then I'll contract to see that your grave is kept green!" - Detroit Free
