STEDMAN'S SALEM MAGAZINE. TS TO BE THE TITLE OF A LITERARY PERIODICAL

In offering to the Public my Magazine, I claim for the Editorial chair no superiority over that department of other like Periodicals; but I do claim for the talent of North Caro lina, and the South generally, that will be brought to its support, Southern patronage. And I also as a southern man, and the Editor of a Southern Magizine, claim at the hands of the Southern country, and especially of North Carolina, that aid support that will here, at home, establish, upon a firm basis. a fountain of Literature, and exclusively a Home Literary

Many are the Magazines now published in the Northern States that are flooding the whole Southern country. There is not, (it is probable,) a county in any Southern State that is not visited by "Harper," "Graham," "Peterson." or "Godey;" while here, in North Carolina and the South, where genius unsurpassed and unequaled reigns, the literary talent that is brought into exercise is dedicated to the support of Northern Magazines, while Southern enterprise, taste and talent bow in humble submission to such suicidal policy of Southern contributors.

Why, I ask, cannot we-North Carolina, the South-send greeting to our Southern clime a Magazine, acceptable for the many qualities that adorn the pages of the most chaste, Magazines; but few in number are they, and unknown, compared to the publications of the north, which every mail brings to our home, filled with the result of hired labor, and teeming with unpardonable sedition. to aid me in 'my enterprise, and in promoting a literary England's Summer, 1857.

This is better poetry than we usually see in the newsto be from the pen of R. Moncton Milnes:

The echoes of the rage of war Fade in the Eastern distance : "Two years ago" looms very far in our well filled existence : On that broad East, yet more remote. We waste not thought or feeling, But muse on British flags afloat,

And swarthy millions kneeling

Week after week the summer sun, Undimmed by cloud or shower. With an Italian speed brings on The happy harvest hour : The arts of peace, by plenty nurst Proclaim the world's alliance, Even in the merry trumpet burst, And shouts of gay defiance.

Then flash along the sentient wire Some words so brief and fearful, That they who hear them scarce desire To see their children cheerfu!: Tidings that through wild Hindostan. Where Britain's rule stood surest. No life is safe of Christian man,

The loftiest or the poorest. Is it a nation roused to meet A people maddened by the heat Of just or false opinion? No; soldiers cared for as our sons, And clothed with England's honor, Have turned their parricidal guns

With basest craft upon her! Soon things that make young blood run cold We whisper, while we tremble: Or cry that truths shall not be told We to ourselves dissemble: And hideous images affright Our soul's deep hiding places, And in our sleep we start at sight

Of unknown forms and faces. Our fair expanse of green and gold Can hardly find us grateful, The very sun that could behold Such scenes is almost hateful: Warm rays flare up to cruel heat,-

We sicken and we languish, With those on whose sad heads they beat Intolerable anguish! We mark, as comes the breeze of morn To freshen and to sweeten The ripples of the oaten corn, The billows of the wheaten;

And feel that not one such sweet breath Can reach where parch'd and tangled The earth gives up to wasting death Our brethren foully mangled. And oh! the pangs of those who know Hearts that will bear about the woe Of memory until broken:

God give them thoughts of those who died In Christendom's first ages,-The child, the veteran, and the bride,-The saints of history's pages! For these are Christian martyrs too-And England's all the dearer: The mighty work she has to do These agonies brings nearer ;-

No moment to abandon The task of world-embracing good She once has laid her hand on. She cannot match the develish deed. Nor mate the hideous treason .-Her blow is not the traitor's meed. But self-defending reason: That will be lavish of its life,

Conjuring her by that pure blood

And hold all cost uncounted. Till through the length and breadth of strife This peril be surmounted. Then may she pardon-only then-When shame and conscience-stricken, The credulous or slothful men Who let the horror thicken-Who little knew and nothing planned The evil bond to sever.

Nor dared to burst it with the hand Of resolute endeavor. Yet while the rulers we condemn, Who failed in due provision, We trust for Britain, as for them, In history's great decision,-That subject lands more justly ruled, And strength more mildly wielded.

Had never been, than when befooled To noble hopes we yielded ;-Hopes of a world the force of law, The worth of knowledge prizing;-From Heathendom's debasing awe To Christian reverence rising; Hopes of a people struggling forth From custom's deep entrancement, Led by the conquerors of the earth To Freedom's safe advancement.

Be this an Oriental tale By Saxon pride engendered, Hopes for a hundred years may fail,! Yet not be all surrendered : And now from each distracting scene Of passion fiercely nourished, We know what India might have been Had Moslem tyrants flourished:

So would have been, and yet would be, If England shrunk from duty. Then watch your harvest wealth with glee; Rejoice in Nature's beauty. Making her bounties ministers Of toil and self-denial, And Victory's surest harbingers. After the fiery trial.

At the last advices the greatest anxiety respecting the come the event of a dress reform." fate of Gen. Havelock was felt, both in Calcutta and Great Britain. It is known that he had a second time fallen back to Cawnpore after his small force had been reduced by sickness to less than half its number. His gallant little army had displayed almost incredible activity, and fought, it is said, more battles, with uniform success over an enemy greatly superior in numbers than was ever before fought in the same time. Especially the Highland regiment had awakened by its dash and achievements the memory of the best days of Scotland. But men of northern race fighting to the waist in water, exposed to heavy rains at night, amidst rice swamps, without any shelter, and to the glare of the almost vertical sun of an Indian midday cannot long live. Disease has done to Gen. Havelock's army what the enemy could not, and he has been forced to abandon his attempt for the relief of the garrison at Lucknow. It now seems to be apprehended that no assistance can reach Lucknow in time to save it; and as for Gen. Havelock it was represented that the enemy was moving on him from three quarters in overwhelming force, completely enclosing him-from Oude, from Gwalior on the west, and Dinapore on the southeast. Fanny Elssler.

Most of us remember Mademoiselle Fanny Elssler, pean for American boards. Her choregraphic career was not long but it was extremely brilliant. Her beauty, her grace, her elegance, the marked individuality of her dancing, her wonderful talents as a mime, and her charming, sprightly expressive face, made her universally popular. Her fame, perhaps, acquired new interest to some persons from the popular rumor which associated her name with the ill-fated Duke de Reichstadt, (son of Napoleon and Marie Louise,) although she invariably assured her more intimate friends that it was an idle piece of gossip, without the least foundation. It was late in 1834 that Fanny Elssler made her appearance in Paris, and the history of her engagement is a rather curious bit of stage history. Fanny, with her sister Therese, was playing at London when her fame reached France, and the manager of the Grand Opera posted over to see on what foundation the rumors were raised. He came, saw and was conquered. Mdle. Fanny Elssler was very anxious for an engagement at Paris. Mdlle. Therese was afraid of that city, and these indecisions rendered the manager's negotiations a very delicate affair. While they were vacillating between a small salary, very irregularly paid, at London, and eight thousand dollars, new horrors can reach British cars; that the catalogue and punctuality in Paris, he gave them a grand banquet of torture and insult has been exhausted; and the next at the Clarendon Hotel, and served them up, with a desert, a silver dish, containing forty thousand dollars worth of jewels and diamonds, which was handed round to the guests as if it contained so many pea nuts. The sisters selected each one of the most modest trinkets in the dish-though these bagatelles were worth two thousand dollars a piece—and to the gratification of the manster on that subject will be read with interest. It will, officers, though good regimental ones, are incapable of had been satisfied by the insertion of a provision that the engagement of three years might be ended at will at the expiration of the first fifteen months. Mdlle. Therese did not come to America with her sister, and we are informed that we lost a great deal by her absence, as Mdlle. Fanny was never so brilliant as when her sister was at her side! The two different talents completed each other and made a harmonious group of an exquisite perfection.
