From the New York Herald. The Cotton Trade. We extract the following from the money article of the New York Herald, of October 28th: A very general enquiry at present is, what will be the effect of the panic on our cotton interests, and will it materially depress the price of cotton permanently or temporarily? At this period of the year the cotton dent. It is therefore ordered by the Court, that publication grower has no friends. At the opening of the season for the deliveries of the newly grown crop, its extent is magnified-trade is always depressed, goods are abundant, and from the tenor of articles on this subject, a disinterested party would find their reasons so plausible will be taken against him, and the property levied upon sold that a large overstock at all the cotton depots at the end of the year would appear certain, and a fall in value to about one-half or two-thirds of the current prices of the day appear to be as fixed a fact as anything in the future can be; and yet, let the crop be what it may, it all disappears-and in the case of the past two seasons, termimate at twenty-five to forty per cent. over the supposed extravagantly high prices of the commencement. The cause of this is a very simple one-it is the course of nature; and no combinations of banks, capitalists or manufacturers combined can withstand it, for it arises from the inability of the production to supply the conof thousands or millions of people, depend upon the culdemur, or judgment pro confesso will be taken against him, and the property levied upon sold to satisfy Plaintiff's debt States; frosts, worms, and a hundred of accidents interture of this annual plant, in a small part of the United vening steadily between sowing the seeds and picking the crop, which, with all the care bestowed upon its culture, and the inducements of certain sales at high prices, has | Made Men .- Self made men? The loss of this market for four or six months is a mere bagatelle. The great demand now opening in China, and the recovery of the India market will offset it and leave a balance. The consumption of Great Britain has never been other than an increased one, when she THE SUBSCRIBER AT SEPTEMBER TERM, 1857, OF has had a good harvest. Cotton at Liverpool was quoted at nine and three-eighth pence for pence sterling at New Orleans; whereas it is selling at got out of long leaf pine. They would respectfully solicit a New Orleans now at four and three-fourth pence to five pence sterling. The price existing at Liverpool is the price the consumption pressed it to, and manufacturing t at that rate is profitable business in Great Britain, for goods go off rapidly, and there are very light stocks at Manchester, probably they were never smaller. We can cite an instance to illustrate this: Mr. W of this city, a very heavy importer of British staple dry goods, anticipated this pressure about six weeks since. On the plea of removal he advertised great reduction in prices, and countermanded nearly the whole of his Manchester orders, directing the goods to be re-sold as made, and the contracts sold out. By the Europa he has advices of sales at a profit for the supply of the British consumption, of his whole stock and orders. The markets at this side being already three pence sterling, or season, and will therefore feel the greatest urgency to ginia.

EXCERPTS FROM THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY .- SAYINGS OF JERROLD .- Nay, for the very dun young Douglas had an epigram,—as bright, but not as welcome, as a sovereign. A saying of those early days has found its way into a comedy,—but not the less belongs to his authentic biography. A threatening attorney shakes his fist at the villakin where at the window the wit is parleying with him. A Frightened Hoosier.—Officer Pat Flannerty, of Philadelphia, is fond of a good joke—he never misses an opportunity. A few days since he was sitting on the Vanlut street wharf, when a long, lank Hoosier, a deck hand on one of the steamers running to Savannah, passed him, holding in one hand a section of bread, and in the other a huge bologna sausage. At almost every step he would satisfy the cravings of his appetite with bite from each of the aforesaid articles. Pat no sooner saw him than he determined upon a joke. As the Hoosier passed Pat, a rat ran across the sidewalk, at which he wickedly made a kick. "Leave that rat alone!" yelled Pat, as if angry.

"Leave it alone?" replied the Hoosier, looking at Pat, with his mouth full of bologna, " what do you want a feller to leave that alone fur?" &" Because it belongs to me, and I will not have it " Belongs to you! What on airth do you want to do with rats? "Make bologna sausages with them, sir, and right nice ones they make too." The Hoosier waited to hear no more, but throwing his bologna as far as the strength of his arm would send it, with an "Ah-ooh! pchth-pchtu!" he hastened to the nearest groggery for a three cent dram, to, as he expressed it, "take the darned ratty taste out."
