RUST IN WHEAT .- It has been long known, and the idea acted on among the Spanish agriculturalis's in I'exas and Mexico, that the rust in wheat is produced by showers of heavy dews, followed by a hot sun, during that period of vegetation when the wheat is in bloom and milk. The effect of the sun upon the wet plant produces the rust. To avoid this result, two men take a heavy rope, say twenty or thirty feet long, or longer, and walking at that distance apart, draw it over

After a heavy dew the rope should be drawn overthe wheat early in the morning. Wheat planted on hills, or windy positions, generally escapes rust; when in low flat ground, where there is less wind, the rust takes effect. Smut is probably produced in the same
