

How Grant Drove his Men to Slaughter—Merciless Neglect of his Wounded.

We ask our readers to carefully peruse the following article, a correspondent of the New York Times, written from Grant's headquarters, before Vicksburg, in which the writer coolly attempts to justify Grant for mercilessly sacrificing the lives of so many thousands of his men, knowing before hand what the result would be; only to appease the clamors of the ignorant masses of the North.

People may be disposed to find fault because Gen. Grant repeated his assault against the works of Vicksburg, instead of at once proceeding upon the plan of laying siege to the place in form. I have little doubt that General Grant knew very well before making the first assault that the place was impregnable to every regular approach; but, by a happy opinion, in a measure, compelled him to make the attack in the precise manner that he did. Had he placed his army before these works and commenced a formal investment, a week would not have elapsed before half the people and two thirds of the press of the North would have been assuring that the relief force would have been half starved and feeble in number, that the works were of no strength, the guns were all wooden, and a thousand other things of the kind usual under similar circumstances.

Gen. Grant probably foresaw this, and determined to proceed upon it, and that the place was impregnable to every regular approach; but, by a happy opinion, in a measure, compelled him to make the attack in the precise manner that he did. As was expected, it met with a bloody and overwhelming repulse, and a heavy loss. He then tried to break through the lines in the night, but was repulsed. From the Chattanooga Rebel, 3d Inst. The Situation.

We have nothing which we regard as officially reliable from the North, this morning, except the excellent health and spirit of the rebels.

Passengers report the evacuation of Tallahoma by our troops. Whilst we are not positively advised of this, beyond the rumor of the hour, we have no doubt of its correctness. If it be true the movement is a good one, and will meet the sanction of the rank and file of the army, and of all who know anything about the nature of that region of country.

Our first and last duty is to whip Rosecrans. That the mind of Gen. Bragg has this intent, no man, I think, can doubt. And whether the thrashing comes at Tallahoma or somewhere else, it is a question to be determined by those Generals who command the military of the Confederacy.

Our mind is, and has always been, that Tallahoma is no place at all. It is low and marshy. It may be turned on either hand by half a dozen different routes. It is the funnel of considerable traffic of territory, nor the defence of any single point. There are many points along the line of the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, more available by far, and whatever induced the creation of fortifications there has always been a mystery to our mind. We looked upon the matter as a puzzle of science and never troubled our brain about it.

It is not to be expected that the rebels will continue to minge with our men, to cheer them by his presence, to let them know that his heart is in their cause, and to encourage them steadily flying prejudices, which were perhaps based upon a wrong estimate of his character, and will vanish altogether upon a better acquaintance.

Rumors were current on the streets during yesterday, that the rebels were moving down the line of the Nashville and Chattanooga and Peabody stage roads. Parties immediately from the front, state that it was reported that only six thousand Yankees were on that route, but it was believed they had been driven back by a well-aimed fire of our artillery, and to evacuate that section yesterday states that there is not a Yankee between Decherd and Manchester, and it was believed that Rosecrans discovering that his flank movement had been anticipated, had fallen back.

Our only way of finishing with the enemy day after day, is to keep them on the march, and to defeat yesterday about four miles from the city of Tallahoma. The enemy though close enough to our lines to give battle at Tallahoma, and at Decherd, for our men were in line of battle all yesterday at the latter point, awaiting his approach, manifested no desire to "come to terms."

It is not to be expected that the rebels will continue to minge with our men, to cheer them by his presence, to let them know that his heart is in their cause, and to encourage them steadily flying prejudices, which were perhaps based upon a wrong estimate of his character, and will vanish altogether upon a better acquaintance.

GRANT THREATENS TO DESTROY NATCHES—ANOTHER FIGHT REPORTED AT PORT HUDSON—LOGAN'S CAVALRY—DESTRUCTION OF STORES, GREENBACKS, MULES, &c., &c.

Col. Smith, of Grant's staff, on the Arizona, accompanied by the Allen, (captain) came down last evening and anchored at Natches, and communicated with the Mayor threatening to burn the town, because government stores and cattle were crossed here. The Mayor replied that he had no control of the transportation. Smith said that he came to dictate terms, not to discuss them, and he would burn the town if transportation did not cease from that hour. He also threatened to shell Vidalia, because the Texas army said that they would cross cattle where they pleased. The greenbacks have left and all is quiet.

A gentleman from Woodville, reports heavy fighting at Port Hudson, on Saturday and Sunday last. Deserters state that the fight was more desperate, and the Federal loss was heavier than ever before.

On the morning of the 2nd, Logan's cavalry attacked the Federal six miles below Port Hudson on the Mississippi, burned a large amount of commissary and quartermaster's stores, and wounded one hundred and fifty, and capturing prisoners. Among the captured was a Colonel, a Major, a Captain and Quartermaster. He also destroyed one hundred and fifty thousand rations, half a million of dollars in greenbacks, seventy five wagons, and took three hundred mules.

At 6 o'clock, P. M., on Saturday, Gen. Lee had changed his front and occupied the ground which the enemy had been driven from on the 1st and 2nd. His whole army was in splendid spirits and masters of the situation.

Gen. Pickett and Pickett were wounded; Col. Avery, of North Carolina, killed; and Barrett and Parker wounded.
