HARD Eggs.-Three colored children, aged respectively, eleven months, three years, and seven years, ate between them, last Monday, sixteen hard boiled eggs, and the youngest, when last heard from was at the point of death. They were the children of one Jere Everett, residing at Middle Sound, and we would if called on for an opinion, emphatically term those children, " hard eggs." 1

CAPTURED, TRIED, AND SENT TO JAH.—Yesterday Constable Sellars arrested John Williams, a colored man charged with having stolen, sometime ago, a fin double-barreled gun from the plantation of Col. T. C. McIlhenny. Williams was arrested in this city, where he has been for sometime, occupying a berth in an old house, on the corner of Water and Mulberry streets and generally believed to be the "headquarters" of the band of burglars who carried on so extensively a few

Williams was tried before Justice Mc Quigg, and fined $10 and costs, and not being able to pay this sum was committed to jail.

TOOK HER HUSBAND'S PLACE. Fred Kling was indicted for retailing liquor, and he was summoned to appear at the Special Court yesterday morning At the required time Mrs. Kling appeared, and intimated her determination to stand trial in lieu of her husband. It was she according to her version, that sold the liquor, and it should be she who should "face the danger"-and she did face it in a most lion-like manner. She exhibited that weakness common to ber sex. She could not restrain her voluble tongue. She impeached, in no very gen tle terms, the veracity of witnesses; she showed, to no little degree, a contempt for the officers of the Court, and she evinced a heroism equal to that of the historic Joan of Arc. In fact, Mrs. Kling proved hersel 'much of a man," and we take pleasure in recording this unmistakeable sign of progress in the teachings of Elizabeth Cady Staunton and Mss. Dr. Walker, We regret to say Mrs. Kling's heroist was manifested to no avail.

She was fined $25 and her case placed on the State clocket. The contract A share

We cannot but admire such "wifely' conduct as that she exhibited in so remarkable a manner.

Poor Jor. - A disconsolate looking freedman, calling himself Joe Kelley, entered Squire McQuigg's office vesterulay, and his face bore the saddest expression that mortal countenance ever yet assumed, Joe said he was from Middle Sound, a laborer on the farm of Mr. James Grant, and was once a married man, with a pretty wife, a wee-bit baby, and a sunday suit of Hartsfield quietly slipped the pocket book clothes, the last of which had been stolen leaving him only the wife and baby. The loss of the "Sunday suit" sorely troubled Joe, and he wished Squire Mc-Quigg to issue a warrant for the arrest of one Joe Grant, (col.) whom he strongly suspected of being the hard-hearted rogue, and against whom he could produce di-

Betsey became eloquent in her appeals to the Magistrate, and awere so well that departed feeling very much consoled, and rect evidence needed only the "Sunday suit" to conplete his worldly hap piness.

Yesterday William Raymond, a colored man, who for the last month or two has been confined in jail on the charge of having stoller a tub of land from Messrs. Rump & Meyer. was taken from his place of confinement, and carried before Squire

McQuigg to stand his trial. In consideration of the long time for which he had been imprisoned, he was fined only $5 and costs, and was allowed fifteen days to earn the necessary sum with which to defray the five. 130 leid

LARKINS DENOUNCED AS AN IM-POSTER.-Thursday evening the Advisory Committee of the Freedman's Savings Bank met at the Banking House for the purpose of attending to business, relating to the interest of the Institution. After grave matters had been discussed, Gen. Rutherford was seen to give one of his most affable smiles, and it was then known the " devil would soon be to pay." The General did not long suspend his modus operandi of attending to small matters, and at once asked Larkins to what regiment he belonged during the late war. The reply was to the "4th Maryland Cavalry-first private-afterward Lieutenant."

This didn't satisfy the inquisitive Rutherford, and he pursued his unpleasant interrogatories by asking to what regiment did he belong at the close of the war. The answer was " to the 8th New York Artillery-rank of Captain,"

Rutherford's eye twinkled. He co drew from his pocket the official report of the Adjutant General of New York, and informed Larkins his name was not on the list. Larkins stammered out an unintelligible reply, to which R. retorted by requesting him to point out his name. This Larkins failed to do, and then Rutherford denounced him as an imposter, and applied to him naughty insinuations. Larkins swore he would be revenged, and confusion ensued, not to be abated until the Committee raised its stentorian voice When the house had become quiet, the Committee pointedly said to Larkins, "we give you two weeks to refute the serious charges made against you." The whole then adjourned, Larkins wishing Rutherford at the devil, and that sedate personage feeling like he was at the other extrem-

Happy Rutherford! Discomfited Larkins!

Pick-Pockers .- Two pick pock ets were yesterday arrested by officer W. H. Moore (col.) and the means used for their capture reflect credit on the strategie powers of the colored officer.

It appears that Moore had for sometime suspected the two men, whom he knew to be scoundrels, but their cunning had long enabled themato practicen villainny with success, and to defy justice with an air of well assumed innocence. Their names are Willis Hartsfield and James Dudley. both colored, both rogues, and both the smartest scoundrels that have infested this section for some time. Yesterday a colored man, one John Lord was engaged in selling vegetables, and during the morning had accumulated a very respectable amount of money. The two pick-pockets cautiously watched him, and officer Moore as cautiously

Suddenly a bright idea flitted acros Moore's mind. He would entrap the sly ascals. This was the programme known only to himself. He proceeded to a store and got a gentleman to mark a piece of fractional currency in such a manner that it could not be mistaken. This sum- (ten cents) he placed in a pocket book, stepped up to Lord, the vegetable seller; and offered to lend him a pocket book in which, to put his bulk of money. The offer was accepted, and the accompanying wink of the eye was understood. Lord placed the pocket book in his pocket, but did not put any money into it. Moore stood near by apparently quite

The vegetable seller became inattentive to the proximity of the pick-pockets. They were perfectly deceived.

A few moments clapsed when Wil from Lord's pocket. In a Moore seized him, and the evidence of his guilt was so strong that even his powers of lying were benumbed, and he tacitly acknowledged the act. The two were carried to City Hall and placed on trial before the Special Court

Good PRINTING INK.—We are Gray's Ferry Printing Ink Works, for which W. H. Bernard, Esq. of the Wil-mington Star, is the Agent. It is easily worked, and gives a fine and clear impression, and we recommend our brethren of the press to give it a trial.
