A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Christmas again! To stand on the shore of Time To-Be and to look back painfully over the dim waters of the sea of the By-Gone; to feel that the eager years are scudding by you like the pinching blast from the naked heath; to realize that Life's vain, fleeting show can delude and torture you only for a little while—a very little while; to know the hollowness of things and sound the shallowness of men; to see after, around and before; to penetrate to the core of terrestrial enjoyment and see the bubble explode, and to make "deep sea soundings" into the human heart and draw to the surface the slime of deceit and the debris of shipwrecks of hopes and loves and lives;—in a word to dupe yourself into the belief that you are a philosopher and that you have the philosopher's stone, is not to be hearty and healthy and strong, is not to believe in the infinite possibilities of man and the infinite love and mercy of God. Such a creature may be a Thing—bare, loveless, soulless—it is not a Man in the sense we know, esteem and admire men. For such a Thing cold reason and incomprehensible philosophy must forever suffice; for this creature comes no Christmas in genial warmth, perpetual freshness, pure and holy memories and bourgeoning of things to be.

Christmas comes again to some of us—comes in the zest of youth or mellowness of years—comes, may we not say, as the Good Angel of the year with healing in his wings and love and light in his eye. Once more we are a child and the grey old homestead witnesses our freaks, frolics and fancies—the gay duck pond and the tiny boat; the old well with the creaking sweep; the "meadow brown and sera," where the piping of the partridge and the low, sudden whistle of the lark amused us hour by hour; the purring brook in the self-same meadow, where the shining minnows played and the great dun cattle slaked their thirst; the dark wood that made us dream many a day-dream of Robin Hood and his outlaw band, and in which we chased in boyish glee and confidence the sleek, demure squirrel, only to fall and bruise our nose or tear our trousers—these and many similar scenes troop around us in fancy as we contrast the present with the past, the Christmas of to-day with one of those golden festive days. But we live not, move not, by contrasts and comparisons; we live and do in the present. We enjoy nothing solidly, if not the existing moment.

Once more! Hail to the day the divine Son of Man entered the world! Hail to the deliverance brought and His mighty love for the erring, criminal children of men. To-morrow every knee ought to bow, every tongue be loosed and every heart speak its gratitude.

"The bells are ringing across the snow— Across the snow in the Christmas Eve; Now wild, and sweet, now faint and low, In the quick years evermore.

We sing a requiem, sad and slow, To the sainted rest of days of yore; For men must come, and men must go, In the quick years evermore.

We ring a chime—and a happy chime— To the troubled hearts of men that be; As came a voice of olden time, On the shores of Galilee.

But fair of all is the last sweet chime We ring of the years and years to be Ere cometh the golden harvest time Of immortality!

IT IS TIME FOR IT TO STOP.

The harrying of the two Carolinas by Federal military and native scoundrels dressed up in a little brief authority, imprisoning citizens, without civil warrant and trying them under a tyrannical law opposed in spirit and letter to the Constitution of the United States, and keeping the people in such terror that the operations of business are interfered with, has been continued long enough we should think to satisfy the most bitter enemy of our section. Now that hundreds have been dragged about the country, jailed for months, tried by packed juries and sentenced to the penitentiary like felons, "let us have peace." It is time to give the poor South some succor. The infamous, infernal policy of the Government towards us certainly makes no friends in any section, and we should think the intelligent people of the North would see into the malign purpose that inspires all these persecutions and entertain a most profound disgust for the authors of the tyranny and their devilish engineering. When party necessities require such despot treatment of an innocent, law-abiding people, the party that is put to such straight is kept in power ought to be driven out of power. It is time that the voters of the Northern States were seeing the inevitable tendency of these violent measures pursued by Congress and the Administration in their dealing with the South. The Constitution can not be preserved under frequent intrusions, neither can liberty be perpetuated by despot legislation and military occupation of States.

Henry T. Tuckerman, the elegant essayist and sketch writer, died in New York on last Sunday, in his fifty ninth year. Mr. Tuckerman's "Characteristics of Literature" was a favorite book of our younger days. We admired it for its graceful diction and candid critical opinions. Mr. T. wrote frequently for that old favorite, the Southern Literary Messenger, and was the peer of Poe, Thompson and the galaxy of writers and scholars employed upon that best periodical the South ever had. His "Italian Sketch-Book" gave him most reputation.

Palmetto Leaves.

Bennettsville is to have a tournament on Wednesday. The new postoffice in Charleston was opened to the public for the first time on Thursday.

An old colored woman, by the name of Peggy Miles, was found dead in her bed in Charleston on Thursday morning.

A boat containing two colored men was capsized in Ashley river, near Charleston, on Thursday night, and one of the number (a one-armed man) was drowned.

The Chester Reporter regrets to learn that the dwelling house of Mr. Alexander Grant, with all its contents, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday afternoon last. None of the family were at home at the time. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been accidental.

The Lancaster Ledger says: A difficulty occurred in the Tank neighborhood, on last Saturday night, between Sam. Durham, negro, and John Polk, white, which resulted in the death of the former. The difficulty between the parties commenced at the store of Mr. G. W. Bell, when Durham attempted to kill Polk with an axe.

The Cotton and Corn Crop of 1871.

The cotton returns received this month at the Department of Agriculture, are similar in tenor to the November reports, fully sustaining the moderate promise of improvement upon the somewhat gloomy views presented in October. Yet the change is not so marked as to modify materially the prospect foreshadowed in the monthly reports for July and September. The latest returns would indicate an estimate almost identical with that of the September report, for a favoring autumn, which could scarcely bring a crop exceeding three and one-third million of bales. Frosts have been delayed till November, in some localities till the twentieth, and weather has been generally favorable for picking, without waste or discoloring of fibre. A fair rendering of the recent local estimates, which have been unusually numerous and complete, gives a total aggregate of three million four hundred thousand bales as the present expectation of the cotton yield of 1871.

The area in corn has been greater in 1871 than in any former year. In June and July the prospect was favorable for a larger aggregate than that of the great corn year, 1870, which exceeded the yield of the preceding year by a quantity greater than that which represents the advance made from 1859 to 1869. The corn crop of the latter year being small, while the wheat crop was exceptionally large; a comparison of the figures for these decennial periods will very inadequately represent the average increase of either crop in the past ten years. The first indication of damage to corn were received in June from many points in the West, where worms in soil lands were more destructive than usual.

Some injury was wrought by the frost in northern New England as late as June 24. In July the condition of maize was reported above an average, though chinchbugs were becoming numerous in the Ohio basin. Growth was slow in moist, cold soils in the Alleghanian region until the first of July. In August the influence of drought became manifest in Southern Illinois, Indiana, portions of Michigan, and in other sections of the West, and in portions of the Gulf coast States. The ravages of the chinchbug became more severe in the Western States, in some localities proving a scourge. As a whole, the crop is an average in yield, and in view of the increased area occupied, a large one.—Washington Patriot.

A Hyena Loose in a Menagerie.

The visitors at Barnum's Menagerie will remember the spotted hyena which, owing to its savage nature, was kept securely chained in a strong cage. Last week the Benevolent Bergh, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, visited the Museum and sympathized with the hyena in its captivity, and left instructions for Mr. Barnum to have the animal loosed so that it might enjoy greater liberty. This was accordingly done and the result shows it to have been a case of mistaken benevolence. During the night of Sunday last the vicious brute gnawed its way through a wooden partition separating it from a beautiful spotted leopard, of remarkably mild disposition. The leopard, however, resented this intrusion, and a terrific fight ensued. Every keeper and helper in the establishment hurried to the spot and vainly endeavored to separate the combatants. This they were unable to do, and the untamable monster succeeded in almost destroying the leopard, which is valued at $6,000. The animal then escaped from the den and attacked the elephants, who succeeded in defending themselves well. The brute beaten away then attacked the horses and camels indiscriminately, two ponies and a horse were seriously injured and a valuable camel totally destroyed. The scene as described by an eye witness was of the most exciting and diabolic description. The digger Indian who is exhibited as part of the menagerie, after many attempts succeeded in lassoing and securing the vicious brute. Mr. Barnum attributes the catastrophe to the instructions received from the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, and speaks of his intention of suing that society for the damage sustained.—N. Y. Evening Telegram, Dec. 19.

According to a Sacramento paper the wild geese are so numerous along the line of the California and Oregon railroad that snow plows are necessary to keep the track clear.

STAR BEAMS.

Alexis enjoys a Virginia reel. Gin is made out of sage brush in California. California is now successfully growing bananas. A Minnesota woman's grand-father has willed her $1,250,000. The London Times thinks three men-of-war could capture that city. A machine to extinguish fires has been invented by a woman in St. Louis. St. Louis was sufficiently behind the times to have a sunstroke last week. The British museum has an autil which, it is said, belonged to one of the Pharaohs. Mr. Hagop Harootun, of Rodosto, Turkey, is a student at Bates College in Maine. An Illinois woman threw vitrol in the face of a rival, burning her horribly and putting one eye out. The mountain ash is recommended for planting in city greens and gardens, on account of the beautiful appearance of the tree in winter.

"Orpheus C. Kerr." (Robert Newell), the well-known newspaper correspondent, has thrown aside his quill, and gone into the tobacco business. Two prisoners recently escaped from the San Francisco jail, digging their way through a ten-inch brick wall by the aid only of a spoon and a piece of wire. In New York, a woman employed at Bellevue Hospital, on Saturday, found a bottle in one of the offices, and supposing it to contain spirits, she drank the liquor. It was six ounces of chloroform. She died almost instantly.

Unwholesome Cheese—A Family Poisoned in Boston. A somewhat curious case of poisoning occurred in South Boston on Friday, whereby the family of Henry Van Buskirk, consisting of five persons, was seriously affected. On Friday afternoon Mrs. Van Buskirk purchased half a pound of cheese, which, together with some crackers and bread, was served for supper. After the meal was eaten Mrs. Van Buskirk was taken with severe pains in the stomach, and several other members of the family, including an infant fourteen months old, were also affected in a similar manner. The pains continued to increase in violence, and in an hour after the supper was eaten the persons affected were taken with vomiting and purging. Dr. W. H. Quigley, Jr., after making an investigation, pronounced the sickness to be caused by poisoning, and, deeming it advisable, called in Dr. P. P. Ingalls. On the arrival of Dr. Ingalls he and Dr. Quigley resorted to the usual remedies, and were successful in averting death in the cases of Mrs. Van Buskirk and the infant. On Saturday morning both of them were still sick, although her ultimate recovery is not doubted. The other members of the family were only slightly affected, and soon recovered from the effects of the poison. During Saturday forenoon Dr. Quigley ate three drachms of the cheese parleyed at by the Van Buskirk family, and, like them, was similarly affected—so much so that he was unable to attend to his professional duties during the day. No one attributes the poisoning of the cheese to any person, and it remains a mystery in what manner it became tainted.—Boston Times, 17th inst.

A Strange Case.

The right of a child to prosecute its parents for whipping him, and to recover damages in a court of law, is in process of demonstration in Cincinnati. The case is one which, from the wealth and high social standing of the parties, promises to furnish the great sensation of the day in that city. David Gwynne Minor is the plaintiff, an infant in the eyes of the law, who claims, of the Court of Common Pleas, damages to the amount of $50,000 from his parents, for the abuse and ill-treatment he has suffered at their hands since 1858. The boy's petition tells a horrible and disgusting story. That portion which is fit to appear in print recounts how he was thrashed with an iron ramrod and with rubber whips; how he was dragged about the house and down two flights of stairs by the hair; and how, by way of encouraging penitential meditation, he was thrust into a closet, under a tank of hot water, and kept there for ten hours, in such a position that he was unable to stand up or sit down. Such are some of the charges which young Minor brings against his parents, offering in substantiation the scars upon his body and the feeble health which he possesses. The parents have refused an offer to compromise the matter, which act seems to give strength to their side of the case, and it appears probable that the whole disgusting business will come into Court. It is fortunate that such cases are rare; for, however delightful they may be as scandal, they fail to be profitable in any other respect.

Gen. Jackson's Marriage.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial furnishes the following: Judging from the row made over the Russian minister's domestic affairs, should a marriage now occur in high life under the circumstances of Jackson's, there would be a tornado of wrath from the pure and spotless spirits of this enlightened age, whose principal enjoyment of life consists in not letting anybody else enjoy his. In one of Jackson's trips from here to Nashville, he stopped some time there, and boarded at the house of Mrs. Donelson, widow of Col. John Donelson, an emigrant from Virginia. With Mrs. Donelson lived her daughter, a bright, beautiful, intelligent lady, who was unhappily married to one Robard, a man of dissolute habits and jealous disposition. Jackson, being at the same house, saw much of this lady, and her unhappy situation made a deep impression upon his sympathy. As often occurs in such cases, his sympathies ripened into love, but he kept it to himself as much as possible. Robard became intensely jealous and applied to the Legislature of Virginia for a divorce, and soon after, much to Jackson's joy, intelligence came that it had been granted. Mrs. Robard was then at Natchez, Miss., and thither Jackson followed her. He paid her his addresses, and she, considering herself free, accepted him and they were married a few months after and returned to Nashville.

Two years after, much to Jackson's mortification, he learned that the Virginia Legislature had not granted a divorce, but had only authorized a suit for a divorce in a Kentucky court, and that the divorce had just been granted, so that he had actually been married two years to another man's wife! There was no other course left open but to take out a license and be married again, which was done. It is strange that he should have lived two years with a woman lawfully the wife of another man, and not knowing it, having no hint of the divorce proceedings in Kentucky, but such is the story, brought down to us by tradition. Those were days of slow communication, and men were apt to have imperfect knowledge of passing events.

Olive Logan's Wedding.

The New York World of Wednesday contains the following particulars of the wedding of Olive Logan, in that city. It says:

Wirt Sykes and Olive Logan were married yesterday morning at No. 55 West Ninth street, by the Rev. Robert Collyer, of Chicago. The whole affair was of the most unpretending sort. Very few persons were present outside of the bride's own family; there were no bridesmaids or groomsmen, and the ladies none of them appeared in evening dress. The bride wore a dark brown silk, and the rest of the ladies their ordinary walking dresses. The bride's mother gave her away. The groom's attire was rather more elaborate. He wore a dress coat, light pantaloons, a straw-colored tie, glove to match, and a button-hole bouquet. Letters of regret were received from General and Mrs. Logan, George William Curtis, Rev. T. B. Beecher, Professor Tyler, of Michigan University, and many others. In the morning a wedding song, written for and dedicated to the bride, was received by her from Bertha S. Pool, of Rochester. The reception was continued from 11 A. M. to 10 o'clock P. M., and a large number of friends called on the new married couple to pay their respects. Mr. and Mrs. Sykes shortly afterwards started for Warwick, New York, where the latter had made arrangements to lecture this evening.

Missed by Mistake.

The Louisville Courier-Journal of the 11th inst. has the following: "An accident occurred last night on Jefferson street, which was quite interesting, at least to one person concerned in it. Our young and handsome deputy clerk of the Council, Lewis McCleery, was quietly walking down the street, when suddenly a lovely young lady flashed across his path like a startled sunbeam, a soft pair of arms were wreathed around his neck, a pretty face was thrust under his hat, and a plump pair of rosy lips printed a thrilling kiss fairly on his mouth. The bashful young man "felt all over in streaks" for a moment, but recovered himself when the young lady drew back, blushing and trembling, and, timidly hiding her face with her hands, begged to be excused for mistaking him for an uncle. Think of that! An uncle, indeed! But, notwithstanding the insinuation, the young deputy felt under so many obligations to the lady for her mistake that he accepted the apology and gallantly offered to excuse her if she would repeat the outrage. She couldn't see the necessity of that, however, and he sauntered homeward to dream of soft-armed and rosy-lipped angels—and their uncle.

National Degeneracy in France.

A paper on the national degeneracy of France, which is being extensively circulated in Europe, contains some facts of interest to the world at large. From the lecture of M. Jolly, a distinguished member of the Academy of Medicine in Paris, it appears that the use of spirits and of tobacco has frightfully increased, and that a mixture of brandy and tobacco is working an amount of deterioration which will go far to account for the miserable display which the French soldiers made during the late war. Tobacco, it is said, costs Paris 500,000 francs a day, or enough to find bread for 2,000,000 people, and M. Jolly believes that the double intoxication of alcohol and nicotine abundantly explains the wild saturnalia of blood and destruction which was lately held in Paris. The French soldiers, during the war, were so often maddled and blinded by drink and tobacco, when wounded, that they could not be cured the same as those of sober habits. The increase of insanity, especially in the military profession, is rising in exact proportion to the use of narcotics and stimulants.

Who Did this Man Kill?

On Friday morning an unknown man approached some railroad laborers near Allentown, Pa., and requested them to kill him with a hammer. They asked why he wanted to die; and he replied that he had killed a man in New York and was unhappy. He then jumped in front of a freight train, and his head was so crushed that his features were unrecognizable. He was about 35 years old, five feet six inches high, and weighed about 130 pounds.

Independence, Kansas, only two years old, has a population of over 2,000. It has three printing offices, two banks, and will soon have a third; a No. 1 flouring mill; the best free iron bridge in Southern Kansas; a $15,000 school-house is being built; it will have the United States Land Office on the 15th of December and a railroad by the 1st of January, 1872.

Virginia State Debt.

CLEAR AND HARMLESS AS WATER! NATTAN'S CRYSTAL DISCOVERY FOR THE HAIR. Arthur Nattans, Inventor and Proprietor, Washington, D. C.

A PERFECTLY CLEAR PREPARATION in one bottle, as easily applied as water, for restoring Gray Hair to its natural color and youthful appearance, to eradicate and prevent dandruff, to promote the growth of the Hair and stop its falling out. It is entirely HARMLESS and perfectly free from any poisonous substance, and will therefore take the place of all the dirty and unpleasant preparations now in use. Numerous testimonials have been sent us from many of our most prominent citizens. In everything in which the articles now in use are objectionable, Crystal Discovery is perfect. It is treated to contain neither Sugar of Lead, Sulphur or Nitrate of Silver; it does not soil the clothes or scalp; it is agreeably perfumed and makes one of the best dressings for the Hair in use. It restores the color of the Hair "more perfect and uniformly than any other preparation," and always does so in from three to ten days, virtually feeding the roots of the Hair with all the nourishing qualities necessary to its growth and healthy condition. It does not decay and induces a new growth of the Hair more positively than anything else. The application of this wonderful discovery also produces a pleasant and cooling effect on the scalp and gives the Hair a pleasing appearance. We call especial attention to the fact that a limited number of small trial bottles can be had by those wishing to try it. You will notice that in pursuing this course our aim is to convince by the actual merits of the article.
