A Barriende.

Many complaints have reached us, from draymen and others, in regard to the condition of the street, or road, between the old Wilmington & Weldon depot and Wilder's still. In rainy weather the mud and clay is so deep in order to "circumnavigate" that particular Lext. locality and reach their destination. It is hoped that the authorities will do something to remedy this evil.

WILMINGTON, N. C., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1872. Whole No. 1,362

THE OPERA HOUSE.

A desperately bad night, converting the side walks into rivulets and puddles, and the atreuts, into quag-mires, gave a most inaus cious introduction last evening of the "Old Reliable" dramatic company to the Wilmington public. Yet favorable notices from the press of other cities, alded by the mysterious and inexplicable popularity of East Lynne, assembled a very fair audience at the Opera-

We cannot regard the choice of East Lynnea felicitous one with a view to the exhibition of the histrionic aptitudes of the members of a meritorious dramatic organization. We have no disposition to quarrel with the strong popular liking for East Lynne, which is so lavishly manifested, in and out of season, during its performance. Judged by all the canons of criticism, it is an exceedingly weak and inartistic play-in fact a wretched dramatization of a very badly written and extravagantly improbable novel, with a moral which, if not flagrantly meretricious; is certainly not wholesome. Mrs. Wood, its author, is a prolific writer of trashy novels, of which, as a whole, it is sufficient to say that they are neither better nor worse than East Lynne. Mr. Clifton W. Tayleure, an accomplished journalist and dramatist, never executed, in the judgment of his friends, so bungling and disjointed a piece of dramatic patch-work as is the stage version of Mrs. Wood's novel. In the novel, as in the play, the argument is altogether improbable, if not wholly in defiance of human instincts and experience, and the moral challenges all the condemnation which is usually accorded to those features of sensational fiction which are mildly characterized "questionable." The heroine, Lady Isabel, is a weak woman, intellectually and morally, who, after perpetrating any quantity of nauseating sentimentalities in the line of puppylove-making to her husband, who is a thrifty, calculating lawyer, and the least sentimental of human beings, is finally seized with a fit of GREEN & FLANNER, Druggists .- Bateman's jealous rage, based upon no evidence at all, and abandous her home, busband and children for a life of shame and suffering. More wickedly and improbably still, the companion of her flight is a villain and libertine, whose characterand crimes have been known to her for years. Such is the heroine of this unreal and distraught piece of sensational fiction. Archabald Carlyle, the husband of Lady Isabel, is very unattractive stage character, and presents no salient points, no brilliant dramatic possi bilities whetever. The same observation is true of every other character in the play, save that of Sir Francis Levison, who is certainly a very fair type of the conventional libertine of

Whatever the artistic faults of East Lynne; however, there could be no more Quixotic endeavor than an effort to disparage, in popular estimation, a play whose success with the masses has baffled all the critics, and which is securely entrenched behind-the barricades of seven or eight years of popular endorsement.

At all events the merits of the company now performing at the Opera House are by no means involved in questions affecting the literary and artistic features of East Lynna The performance last evening indicated a pains-taking of Graham; also purpose to please, and we hope that each succeeding performance will exhibit a maintenance of this laudable purpose. The difficulties nied and interesting, embracing many striking of a first night's performance, after the fatigues of a day's trevel, were resolutely contended with by the company, and we look for a decided improvement in subsequent performances. Miss D'Este gave the conventional Lady

Isabel, manifesting frequently a very pleasant vein of vivacity. Of the male characters Mr. Stuttz (Sir Francis Levison) had the choice, and accordingly gave the most striking persona-

Abbott's Chances.

In relation to the chances of Gen. & bbott to successfully enforce his claims to the seat in the U.S. Senate from this State to which Geo. Ransom has just been elected by the General Assembly, a Washington correspondent | where laws are daily enacted to prohibit of the New York Times (Administration paper) other persons from enjoying the same

"The case of Gen. Abbott, as claimant to a seat from North Carolina in the Senate, seems to be growing weaker—both before the Com-mittee on Elections and in the sentiment of the Senate—and it is very doubtful if he is ever admitted. While it is agreed that the English precedent is in his favor, it is thought to be exceedingly doubtful policy to establish in this country the principle by which be must be sented if at all?"

'Allading to this same matter the correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette says :

"The Committee on Privileges and Elections have not yet voted upon the case of Abbott, who wants a scat as Senator from North Carolina, notwithstanding the reports to the contrary. A report will be made by Senator Carpenter, when action is taken by the committee, which will bear the signature of Morton, Carpenter, Anthony and Rice, a majority, going over the whole case and citing numerons precedents in English parliamentary law rons precedents in English parliamentary law for the admission of Abbott, but, it is said they have been unable to find a single precedent in the history of the American Congress. A minority report will be made by Senator Thurman, signed by himself, Logan and Hill, which, however, unlike that of the majority of the committee, has not been prepared. This case will open up a very lengthy debate in the Senate, perhaps more than that of Ames, from Mississippi, whose case was argued several weeks.
