THE RESULT.

Well, fraud and other rascality have again triumphed. We have to possess our souls with what patience The thing might have been Untiring work from now until the shades of night fall on the country on the fifth of November next will secure good government to the people in spite of all the corruptionists' art and villainy. Good friends! have faith, be bold, courageous, persevering, true to your Saxon manhood, and all will yet be well,

CONNECTICUT. The local elections in this State last Monday resulted in a complete Democratic victory. We have gained over 200 in Meriden; nearly 500 in Danbury; we have carried such Republican strongholds as Norwalk, Windsor, Andover and New Canaan, All over the State our gains are distributed with an evenness which shows how wide and how sweeping is the movement for Reunion and Reform, in the old Wooden Nutmeg State.

INDIANA.

The latest dispatches will be found under our regular Telegraphic head. It seems that it will require the complete official returns to decide who is elected Governor. The Democrats concede the rest of the State ticket to the Republicans.

Press Comments on Tuesday's Elections

NIL DESPERANDUM.

"Facing the Music with a Confident Front."

[New York Tribune.] In Pennsylvania, the work was done in he precise form and manner prescribed.-The majority in Philadelphia was put up to a monstrous figure, to cover all contingencies, and we have no doubt it will do it. The returns are undergoing changes still in the reports; but Grant Republicans claim 20,000 now for Hartranft in a city which at the last test election gave only 11,494! Nobody doubts that this is fraud, unabashed, unconcealed, gigantic. Whether Pennsylvanians choose to have the convict's candidate forced on them by such means, they must decide for themselves.

[New York Sun.]

This majority [Hartranft's] is altogether the product of fraud. Such open, undisguised, shameless villainy was never before practiced in any American election. The evidence is given at large in another part of this paper. It will be pondered with sadness and alarm by all honest men.

We will not here inquire how such unprecedented fraud will be received by the people. If they consent to it or bear it with ruption have gone further and reached a more dangerous stage than has been im-

[Richmond Whig.] It is not pleasant to explain defeats. It is bad enough to endure them. But these bad as they are, do not render the Liberal cause desperate. In a sense, these three States were merely the skirmish line of the great Liberal array, and if they had sided with us, our work would have been done. And it is, they have our reserves untouched. to ultimate triumph.

[Norfolk Virginian.]

It is equally mournful that elsewhere [than in Pennsylvania] the systems of colonization and fraudulent voting have been successfully applied; but, even with these facts before us, "all is not lost." Far from it! We have a reasonable chance for the November election, for then, when the fight is along the whole line, the Administration cannot concentrate on any one separate State with its colonists and money. But even granting that we are wrong here, it is manifest that a new complexion has been given to public affairs. The Liberal movement means amnesty as opposed to the policy of heaters. ment means amnesty as opposed to the policy of hate, local liberty as opposed to the policy of centralization. These grand and beneficent ideas have been fairly placed before the people of the North, and although the response has not been what we hoped, we are in possession of facts ample enough to warrant us in declaring that the safety of the Republic may be found in this direction.

The Cape Fear.

There have been some slight rains up the river beyond Fayetteville recently, but Capt. Skinner of the Lee reports no perceptible improvement in the amount of water. The river is exceedingly low, the boats having to use flats altogether for the transportation of freight, and then it takes them about three days to make the distance between Favetteville and Wilmington.

Persons who use heavy box lids to keep their window sash up should be careful and not let them fall out upon the sidewalk when people are passing. A case in point occurred on North Water street yesterday morning, when the heads of two gentlemen narrowly escaped being "knocked into cocked hats" by one of the props alluded to, which grazed the hat of one of the two. Such an accident might result seriously.
