WILMINGTON, N. C .: THURSDAY MORNING, NOV. 21, 1872.

THE BOND BUSINESS. Some days since we called attention to the proposition of the Baltimore holders of North Carolina bonds. That proposition it occurs to us, without going deeply into the matter, is impracticable not to say unreasonable. We think so for these naked reasons: The justified indebtedness of the State, that is the amount of debt left after leaving out the special tax bonds and bonds issued under the authority of the Constitutional Convention, nearly twenty-one and a half millions, including interest. For this under the proposition of our Baltimore friends we are to issue bonds payable in thirty years at three per cent. interest for the first five years, four for the next five years and so on increasing until maturity. Three per cent. would give, with the probable cost of collecting the tax, about $675,-000, or 54 cents tax on the estimated property-$125,000,000-in the State.

We do not believe the people of North Carolina can pay this enormous tax. The State government requires, it is said, at least 35 cents to pay current expenses. This is thought to be a burden. What would be thought of ninety cents?

Now it is very easy for the bondholder to figure out a plan for paying himself. But to the impecunious bond debtor the thing is divested of more than half its easiness. North Carolina is anxious to pay every cent of all smell on an open coffee-roaster being she justly owes. Her people are willing to make all reasonable sacrifices. But they are not willing to be sold out root and branch to do even so honorable and so pleasant a thing as paying fresh coffee. The way coffee is used as a off their debts. Let the Legislature devise some better plan than the Baltimore scheme. This question of the management of the public debt will be the most important feature of the legislation of the present session.

give employment for all of her energy, modgive employment for all of her energy, mod-eration, and wisdom for four years. If she will employ this time in developing her re-sources, educating her people, and making friends of all who will meet her in kind-ness, another Presidential contest may find her powerful enough to dictate the terms of the contest, and to hold the wager of battle.

A virtuous people with a free, fearless and honest press to sustain them will out-live any despotism that can be prected by human hands.

WISE WORDS.

There is no abler or more practical writer on the Sonthern press than Col. A. R. Lamar of the Savannah Advertiser. His course since the defeat has been in marked contrast with that of some of his contemporaries. His position of the duty of the South under the changed aspect of affairs has been distinguished for its large catholicity, its devotion to true principles, its manly courage and its wise prescience of what must be done to ensure success. He has not "despaired of the Republic," but has clung with undeviating tenacity to that large faith in American patriotism characteristic of our strongest minds and boldest hearts. From a recent leading article in the

Advertiser we cull the following monumental paragraphs:

The South bore the brunt of the late con-test, and though she emerged from it utterly test, and though she emerged from it utierly defeated as to the general result, to her be-longs the credit of all of the local successes achieved. And she came out of it with-really more character, more strength, and more friends than she could register at its inception. Admitting that the choice of leadership was unwise, that the conduct of the campaign lacked vigor and strategic sa-gacity, and the result was in a measure dis-astrous, yet the South did not fail to hear substantial benefits from the field. Upon herself depends whether she shall reap the full fruition of these.

full fruition of these. There is no cause for her to hang her head in shame and despondency. There is no reason for her to despair of a future of power and prosperity. But to attain this she must exhibit a patience beyond all of her deeds of endurance, and a vigilance proof against weariness. From the field of the late contest the

From the field of the late contest the South has brought away allies in the per-sons of Greeley, Trumbull, Curtin, Schurz and others of that great party which has wrought her desolation. They come pledg-ed to the support of the right of local State government and the liberty of the citizen, the foundation stones upon which rest free government. The balance are mere corol-laries. If these can be established in the land the South and the whole country may rest in peace and security upon the base. rest in peace and security upon the base. * * Four years are allowed to the South before she will be marshalled into position before she will be marshalled into position again to take part in a Presidential contest. Four years in these days of steam, tele-graph, and dispatch in every department of life is a long period. It offers opportunity for mutations in the fortunes of men and nations as great as any the world has yet witnessed. It is the part of wisdom to take advantage of time, the great adjuster of human wrongs and troubles, and to stand prepared to seize upon any developments that shall come in its course. course.

The Asheville Democrat, so-called, died with last week's issue. We thought it was dead some time since. The straight-out and played-out editor, Mr. Silas Flournoy, requests the Raleigh News and the STAR to "deny upon his authority the false charge that he voted the Radical ticket in August." We heard you did, Silas. Glad to set you right; and now rest in peace, mayourneen. This is an un-Timely Topic, and we don't charge a cent for discussing it.
