The Cholera. The Asiatic cholers is a disease an ancient and almost immemorial date, though it was first observed as an epidemic in Bengal in May, 1817. It next made its appearance in Calcutta; in 1819 it extended to the Burmese Empire; in 1820 it arrived in Bombay, where 150,000 persons lost their lives. In succeeding years it visited Persia, Arabia and Asia Minor, in 1829 it appeared in South-ern Russia, and at Moscow in 1830. In 1831 it spread over most of Central Europe, and appeared in England; in 1832 it appeared in London and Paris. On June 8, 1832, it first appeared on this side of the Atlantic at Quebec. and on June 21 New York, the intermediate districts escaping its visi-tation. It reached Boston, Baltimore and Washington in August. In October it spread from Cincinnati to New Orleans. Thence it struck across the country to Texas, and traveled up the Mississippi to the river towns. It revisited this country in 1834, 1836 and 1837. We had a cholera epidemic in 1854, from which Baltimore escaped. There have been subsequent local visitations. The cholera or a disease much residerable fatality, especially among the colored population, has made its appearance in New Orleans this year, with no evidence that it has been imported. We also hear of it in Memphis, next in Nashville, finally in Greenville, Tennessee, not far from the southwestern Virginia. We also hear of one or two sudden deaths in Cinncinnati, attributed to the same disease. It is generally considered a disease of warm and damp clithe Mississippi Valley affords as favorable a foothold for it as the delta of the Ganges. Some consider that its expansion is located along the great sweep of the equatorial current of moist southwest and southeast winds, supposed by some to be the deflection of the trade winds into the to high latitudes in the central part of the continent. For ourselves, the cholera seems to us as eccentric as a comet, and we should almost as coon be disposed to build up a system of medical geography of one as of the other. Whilst the cholera has thus made its appearance in the South-

paper is The Siege. It is issued in Lafayette, Ind., and it should be long-lived, for it purposes, 1. To stop the importation and sale and use of liquor; 2. To break down all mo-nopolies; 3. To effect the repeal of the divorce laws; 4. To substitute arbitration for war; 5. To promote universal love; 6. To strengthen the moral attributes of the Government; 7. To enforce home economy; 8. To establish a non-sectarian school system; 9. To suppress political parti-sanship; 10. To suppress selfish political economy by a mere philan-thropic plan; 11. To defend Labor against Capital. Verily here will be a siege indeed; that of Gibraltar was nothing to it.

Masters Frank Fremont and Joseph Smith, who were Master Strange's close competitors for this dis-tinction, contended with the disadvantage of serious indisposition during the examinations. An interesting incident in the closing exercises was the competitional prize examination in orthography. The school was divided into two sections, the first embracing the larger and more advanced pupils, and the second those of younger years. In the first division Joseph Smith was the recipient of the prize, having, in an examination embracing sixty difficult words made not a single error in spelling. Their elecution was aultless, their enunciation perfect and the piece was one well calculated to display these powers to perfection. The first act recalled the childhood days of the unfortunate Queen and from that the audience attentively followed the fortunes of the beausovereign through the several until the fatal execution. Miss Lizzie Satchwell, as "Queen of Scots, was frequently applauded. Miss Mary Ryan personated "Queen Elizabeth," Miss M. King "Queen of France," Miss Bauman "Countess of Lennox."
