RESURRECTING BOOTH.

Poor, brave Col. Tew having been quietly interred at last beyond the resurrecting hand of any sensationalist of the ghostly vocation, worthies of this ilk now turn their attention to the assassin of Lincoln. Some fellow has seen Booth in the flesh and heard him talk. He comes with a plausible story, far more plausible than the Dry Tortugas horror of which we have had so much and ad nauseam. He tells the St. Louis Republican, or rather tells a man who told that paper, that he saw the veritable J. Wilkes Booth some time in 1866, in one of the Pellew Islands, under the Equator; that the actor was well and had his wife with him. The narrator produced as proof of the interview "a heavy gold medal, heavier than the Mexican silver dollar, bearing appropriate inscriptions, having been presented by the citizens of New York to Booth's father years before the famous actor's death, and while he was at the apex of his histrionic greatness." This Booth gave to his discoverer as a token by which his friends would know that he was alive.

The name of this individual, who has thus in the finding of a dead man eclipsed Stanley, is Carroll Jackson Donelson, according to his own account. He claims to be a blood relative of the late Andrew Jackson Donelson of Memphis, and is on his way to that place to settle the estates of that once distinguished Tennessean. During the war he served as captain in Terry's Texas Rangers. At the close of the struggle he "went West" and shipped from San Francisco as first mate of a vessel in the China trade. Roving about through the seas and islands of the far East, he came upon the Pellew group and John Wilkes Booth.

This is his story. Credat Judæus Apella!

THE COURIER-JOURNAL AND THE KENTUCKY KU KLUX.

It having become quite fashionable for the great newspapers to accomplish some great feat outside of journalism, the Louisville Courier-Journal dispatched a reliable correspondent to the scene of the Ku Klux operations in the central part of Kentucky. This gentleman is vouched for as a Confederate officer of great nerve and coolness, and we are satisfied he is a brave man because none but a man of unimpeachable courage would undertake what he has done. His mission is not merely to write up the deeds and describe the haunts of the marauders who have long been the terror of the country around Frankfort, but he was sent to put down these masked freebooters and terrorists with the aid of the authorities. He has arrested two of the band, and proposes to see that they are fairly tried if there is such a thing as law in Kentucky.

Too long has Kentucky suffered a stigma to rest upon her on account of these Ku Klux, who seem not to belong to any particular party. The Courier-Journal renders the State a great service in agitating for their extirpation. Ku Kluxism, political and non-political, has done our fair South too much harm for us to have the remotest sympathy with it. This Kentucky society seems not to have one feature to save it from the utter condemnation that should be visited upon highway outrage everywhere.

It is significant that Forney's Philadelphia Press, which has been the grand advocate in Pennsylvania for the utmost license in the use of the ballot down South, now says, "the experience of the past ten years in this [that] State calls for the fullest possible restraints upon our election system, consistent with the province of a written Constitution." The curses, in this case like impatient chickens, have come home early to roost.

THE BURNT BALTIMORE THEATRE.

The Fire—Danger and Narrow Escape of Two Ladies—History of the Theatre.

[Baltimore Sun.]

There seems to be a belief in the minds of the attaches of the theatre that the place was fired by an incendiary, and that it caught in the scene room in the rear of Maguire's saloon, on Gay street. The first person to discover that the theatre was on fire was Mrs. Linton, who had charge of the wardrobe of the establishment. In conversation with the Sun reporter at half-past three o'clock this morning, she stated that she and her daughter, Nellie, aged sixteen, and son, Stonewall Jackson Linton, aged eleven years, occupied the third story of that portion of the theatre opening on Fayette street, the lower portion of the L being used for a spare scene and lumber room and private office by Mr. Ford.

As near as she could remember she was aroused at half-past two o'clock by a choking sensation, and when fully awake found her room filled with smoke. Her first movement was to rush into the room where her children were sleeping, and as she passed along a narrow passageway leading to the paintroom of the theatre, beheld sheets of flame darting along the "flies" and "borders" of the stage.

By the time she had awakened her children the flames had reached the passageway, and when Nellie essayed to traverse the same the flames darted in from the top of the stage, burning her severely about the arms and face, and her brother badly on his back, arms and face, and for the moment cutting off their retreat. The next instant, however, the flames darted back to the stage, when Nellie and her brother rushed to a window facing Fayette street, and leaped to a roof running at the base of the second story window.

In falling the young lady struck upon an old rocking chair, which had been lying on the roof for some weeks, sustaining severe injuries to her left side and left arm. While the children were thus making their escape, Mrs. Linton, although fearfully blistered by the heat, ran into the room over Mr. Ford's private office, and which is known as the wardrobe room, for the purpose of throwing into the street the theatrical dresses and other light stage paraphernalia.

By this time several men had reached the fire and, seeing the dangerous position of Mrs. Linton, forced their way through the smoke and into the room where she was at work and compelled her to quit the place.

The Holliday Street Theatre, as is known, is an old landmark of Baltimore, and for the past eighteen years has been under the control of Mr. Jno. T. Ford, whose loss will be heavy. In 1775 and 1776 the "Play House" on Holliday street was built, and in 1811 and 1812 the building just destroyed was erected. The edifice was built by subscription, started by Messrs. Warren & Wood, who were its first managers. Robert Long, the father of the late Robert Carey Long, was the architect and builder. When first built Holliday street was a mere alley, and through the efforts of Mr. Warren it was widened sufficiently in front of the building to allow carriages to turn. Since its first erection it has been steadily insured at a cost greatly exceeding the amount that will be now realized from policies.

After undergoing many changes under different managers, John T. Ford, Esq., became lessee, and in 1859 it was remodeled for Mr. Ford by Mr. James J. Gifford, and opened on Saturday, August 20, 1859, Stuart Robinson, a young Baltimore actor, appearing as Tony Lumpkin, in the grand old English play of "She Stoops to Conquer." Some three years ago the present management purchased the theatre and some adjoining property in the rear, for $100,000. He had eight years to pay for it in annual instalments, the understanding being that the insurance money, in case of fire, was to be devoted to the immediate rebuilding of the theatre.

Mr. Ford purchased the property from Mr. G. Small and Mr. Washington Booth. The magnificent scenery used in the play of the Ice Witch was in the building ready packed to be sent to Washington, to be produced on Monday night next, and was entirely destroyed. All the scenery and machinery, which were the accumulation of many years, and very valuable, were also entirely consumed. Mr. Ford estimates his loss at $50,000.

One of the notable incidents in the history of the theatre is the fact that the Star Spangled Banner, the national hymn of America, written by Francis S. Key, a Baltimorean, was first sung before the public on this stage in October, 1814, by Mr. and Mrs. Durang.

The stage of the Holliday Street has been trod by all the great artists that Europe and America have produced during the past three quarters of a century, including the elder Booth, Edwin Forrest, Edmund, Charles and Fanny Kemble, Florence, Wm. Warren, the father of the present Wm. Warren, now at the Boston Museum, aged sixty-one years, Mrs. Willis, his sister, (now dead,) McCready, the original Ravels, Charles Keene, Ellen Tree, Mrs. Wood, Jas. Wills, James E. Murdoch, the Seguins, Fanny Ellsler, Lola Montez, Mrs. Davenport, John E. Owens, Collins, Powers, Barney Williams, Mrs. Warner, Mrs. Duff, the Wallacks, John Sleeper Clarke, H. L. Bateman, and many others, including many of the prominent and first singers of the world, including Bosio, Mario, Grisi, Piccolomini, Patti, Madame Bishop. To string out the list of artists in all branches of the dramatic art would include, with Ristori, all who have been famous on the stage during the century.

On the boards of old Holliday five generations of the Jefferson family have appeared, viz: the elder Joseph Jefferson, his sons John, Thomas and Joseph, and two of his daughters, his grand-son, Joseph Jefferson, of Rip Van Winkle fame, his grand-daughter, Mrs. Jane Germon, (now considered the best representative of old ladies on the American stage;) his great-grand-sons, Charles B. Jefferson and John D. Germon, his great-grand-daughter, Miss Effie Germon, and his great-great-grand-daughter, Bessie Germon, the daughter of John D. Germon. Both Edwin Booth and his late brother, J. Wilkes Booth, made their debut on the boards of Holliday.

RED MEN.

Improved Order of Red Men—Twenty-Fifth Annual Session of the Great Council of the United States.

[Abridged from the Wilmington (Del.) Commercial, Sept. 9th.]

The twenty-fifth annual session of the Great Council of the United States Improved Order of Red Men convened in this city this morning.

At 9:10 the Great Council of Delaware was called to order by the Past Grand Incohonee, Joseph Pyle acting as Great Sachem, who said that they met to perform the pleasant duty of receiving the Great Council of the United States for the first time on their hunting grounds in Delaware.

Col. B. R. Heisler was then appointed a committee to wait upon the Great Minnewa, (or guard of the Great Council of the United States,) and inform him of the readiness of the Great Council of Delaware to receive the Great Council of the United States.

In a few moments Mr. Heisler returned and announced that the Great Council of the United States were ready to be admitted.

"Admit them," responded the Great Sachem, and the members of the Great Council of the United States, clothed in their regalia, and followed by the delegates from the several States marched into the room, when the Great Sachem, Joseph Pyle, received them in an appropriate address:

"To the Members of the Great Council of Delaware:

"GREAT CHIEFS AND BROTHERS—I had hoped that the response to this cordial and warm reception would have fallen to the lot of some older and more gifted member of the Great Council of the United States, did I permit the occasion to pass without some effort to return our grateful thinks to the Great Council of Delaware and the members of her respective Tribes for this public evidence of her sympathy and brotherly love.

"Year after year, in the discharge of our duties, we assemble in different jurisdictions, and we have always met with warm hearts and cordial friends among the brethren of our order, but this public reception of us by the Red Men of Delaware amidst her hunting grounds lends a new charm to our social intercourse, and makes us feel indeed that we are brethren dwelling together in unity.

"Accept, sir, for the Great Council of Delaware and her Tribes our warmest thanks for this kind reception. I trust, as I believe, that our sojourn among you may be productive of good results, and tend to bind faster the cords that unite all true Red Men everywhere in the bonds of Freedom, Friendship and Charity. And above all, may we so live that when the Great Spirit shall summon us from the councils here it may be to take us to Himself, where His council fire of Love and Glory burneth forever in Righteousness.

"Then we'll come not back to suffer
Where the famine and the fever
Wear the heart and waste the body,
Then our task will be completed;
With the faithful we may follow
To the island of the Blessed—
To the kingdom of Ponemah—
To the land of the Hereafter."

The Great Council-fire was kindled at the 9th run and 45 breaths.

Virginia was represented by Hugh Latham and George E. Bushnell.

Past Great Incohonee Pyle, of the Great Council of Delaware, and Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, read invitations asking the Great Council of the United States to participate in a steamboat excursion and banquet to-morrow, and to be present at an entertainment to be given at the Opera-House on Thursday evening; which invitations were accepted.

A further communication was read from the commandant at Fort Delaware, stating that no garrison was present there, but that the Great Council of the United States would have free access to all parts of the works.

"Herald" Interview with Hon. Horatio Seymour.

[EXTRACT.]

Gov. Seymour—The election of a President for a third term, in addition to all this, will be an overthrow of maxims and usages so strongly held heretofore that the people of this country and of the world at large will look upon it as a proof that we have accepted a change in the character of our government. Many things can be done which do not violate the letter of the constitution, but which effectually change the spirit and tone of public affairs.

Reporter—Do you believe that General Grant or the Republican leaders mean to bring about such a revolution?

Gov. Seymour—No; I do not think they have any such purpose at this time, but I do believe they are acting upon principles which in the end will lead to great and hurtful changes.

— Mr. Thomas Wright has edited and the British government has published two volumes of "The Anglo-Latin and Latinical Poets and Epigrammatists of the Twelfth Century."

STAR BEAMS.

— The health of M. Guizot is said to inspire serious apprehensions.

— The sugar crop of southeast Florida was never so promising as this year.

— Tampa, Fla., has been without a city corporation since 1867, until recently.

— Latest advices from Tortugas, of the 2d instant, report fifteen cases and six deaths from yellow fever.

— Mrs. H. B. Stowe has kept open a school of fifty scholars in Florida during the summer at her own expense.

— Henri Taine, the well known writer on English character and literature, is a candidate for the French Academy.

— Miss Julia A. Garrettson, a farmer's daughter, addressed a farmers' meeting at Washington, Iowa, Saturday.

— The editor of the Lawrence, Kansas, Tribune pleasantly speaks of "the hoary-headed old hooknosed devil of the Leavenworth Times."

— William H. Seward's heirs have received $41,464 for copyright of the first six months of his "Travels Round the Word"—a profit probably unparalleled in this country.

— The South Florida orange crop is predicted to be larger than ever before known in the history of the country. The fruit will bring this season at the groves twenty dollars per thousand.

— The London Athenæum says Mr. Joaquin Miller's book about the Modocs turns out to be a monstrously dull volume, in which he relates his adventures at the California diggings and among the Shasta Indians in early life.

— Among the women of literature and art who did not and have not married, and yet were and are happy, are Hannah More, Miss Edgeworth, Alice and Phœbe Cary, Louise Alcott, Elizabeth Phelps, Emily Faithfull, Anna Dickinson, and Susan B. Anthony.

— A French countess seized a philosopher at the supper table, and, sinking her voice to a whisper, said, "While they are cutting up the fowls, and we have got five minutes to spare, do tell me the history of the world, for I want to know it so much."

— The mere talk of the political "Fusion" in France has had a marked effect upon certain branches of fashionable industry. A Paris correspondent states that "Chambord dresses" are already introduced and largely adopted. The style or cut of these garments may be as simple or fantastic as the various purchasers please, but the material must have an embroidery of fleur de lys.

The Samoan Republic.

Recent arrivals from the South Pacific have brought news of the termination of the war that for four years has disturbed the Samoan Islands. Few have known of the existence of this war, and fewer still have cared anything about its progress or its results. Yet it has ended in a manner which denotes the general advancement of mankind. Originating in a struggle for supremacy upon the part of the people of Upolu, the principal island, it has been concluded by an agreement among the inhabitants of all the islands composing the group, and generally known as the Navigators' Islands, to form a federative republic, with Apia, the chief town of Upolu, as the capital. The American and British Consuls at Apia, with other foreign residents, have been requested to form a code of laws for the new Republic, and to assist generally in establishing it upon a solid basis. In all this, the Samoans have displayed a desire to serve the general good which might be copied with advantages by people claiming to be better civilized.

These events in the South Pacific are not without importance to the United States. The Samoan Islands, lying in the pathway of commerce between San Francisco and Australia, are geographically of equal consequence to the trade from our western coast with the West India Islands to our eastern. Being fertile in the extreme, having some of the largest and safest harbors in the world, possessed of an unrivaled climate, and inhabited by a hardy but thriftless people, they present capacities for development and inducements to emigrants which few of these distant lands can boast. Embracing an area of 2,650 square miles, the islands contain a population estimatek at not more that 60,000, leaving plenty of elbow-room for new-comers, and those who go will find it difficult to prevent growing rich. The fruitful earth being barely more than touched, brings forth an abundant harvest of all kinds of tropical vegetation. Caoutchouc, arrow-root, the castor-bean, ginger, coffee, tano, bread-fruit, yams, oranges, limes, upland rice, and cotton are some of the almost spontaneous products of the Samoan group.

"Sun" Interview with Prof. Wise, the Graphic Balloonatic.

[EXTRACT.]

"Do you anticipate any conflict with Donaldson?"

"Well," said the Professor, laughing, "I am going to take a shot gun with me, and if he gets troublesome I will blow his head off.

Pennsylvania medical schools are still brought into disrepute by the sale of false diplomas by unauthorized institutions. These diplomas can be bought for a small sum, and not long ago England and Germany were flooded with them. It now appears that other countries are also the scenes of this rascality.
