The Gubernatorial Contest Virtually Enced-Hughes Ineligible by Reason of Having Boon Bonper of a

The New York Herald of the 20th prints a two-column special from Bristol, on the Va. and Tenn. line, giving in detail the entire correspondence and particulars of the Clarkson-Fowler duel, in which Colonel R. W. Hughes acted as second for Clarkson, and for which action Hughes appears to have forfeited his eligibility under the constitution to any office of honor, trust or profit in the State of Virginia. The Herald's report concludes as follows: "The question of Hughes's disfranchisement admits, of no doubt, and the Republican party of Virginia are placed in rather an embarrassing position in regard to their standardbearer. The disability under which the rests is a constitutional one, and cannot be removed by the Legislatune; only by a majority vote of the electors qualified for members of the General Assembly.

"It is believed by those thoroughly informed that Colorel Hughes will withdraw from the contest, and the State Republican Executive Committee be compelled to nominate some one in his stead. The election comes off on the 4th of November, which will hardly allow the Republicans time to change front successfully. The mysterious part of the business is why Colonel Hughes should have merm itted his name to be used under such circumstances. Clarkson and Hughes are intimate personal friends, but it is generally understood Clarkson is pelitically opposed to him, although he has made no revelation leading to the exposure.

"I found that the subject of Hughes's awkward position was fully discussed in Bristol, and many queries were made as to why the Virginia press had not gotten hold of this matter long ago.

"In the southwestern part of Virginia I found Kemper's strength was very great, and, regardless of the constitutional objection to Hughes's election, the people of this section were confident Kemper would be selected by a larger majority than even Walker had in 1869.

Complaints of the Conduct of the French Consul at Cartagena-Destruction of an Insurgent Ironelad.

MADRID, Oct. 18, 1873. The Spanish Government has made complaint to the Government of France that the French Consul in Cartagena afforded protection to insurgents. A reply has been received promising that justice shall be done. MADRID, Oct. 16, 1873.

A British dispatch boat from the his intelligent audience; and all were interpreted at Alicante last evening with the news that the insurgent frigate Numancia ran into the Fernando el Catolica and in support of this somewhat startling propthe insurgent frigate Numancia ran sunk her. Over half of the crew of osition the lecturer showed that the Esquithe latter were drowned. The catasthe latter were drowned. The catastrophe is attributed to the inexperience of the officers.

Another version of the affair is current here. It is reported that the Numancia fired into and sunk the Fernando el Catolica because she

THE TRIAL OF STOKES.

Opening of the Defence-Evidence Tending to Establish Lack of Pre-

The opening address for the de-fence in the trial of Stokes, which Mr. Dos Passos began on Friday was concluded on Saturday. Its delivery occupied two hours, and the evidence so far presented by the prosecutionwas laid before the jury, with the fact proposed to be established by the defence. Mr. Dos Passos dwelt upon the testimony, which he insisted would show that Stokes' visit to the Grand Central Hotel was wholly accidental, and that the meeting with Fisk was sudden and anexpected. In his opinion the testimony of Thomas Hart, the only witness claiming to have seen the shooting, was contra-dicted by all the other witnesses and was wholly untrustworthy.

The first witness was Francis M. Bixby, who said Stokes came to his office about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday, the 6th of January, and inquired whether an indictment had been found against him, and whether it was safe for him to go to Providence on Tuesday without fear of being brought back by extradition proceedings. Mr. Bixby reassured him, and they parted, and at 5 o'clock he heard of the shooting. A question was put to Mr. Bixby as to repeated expressions by Stokes of fear of Fisk, which was ruled out by the Court, though Mr. Tremain insisted it was pertinent as to whether Fisk actually had a pistol and drew it on Stokes, Burr, two colored damsels confined in the or whether that was a delusion of county jall, had kneeked a lot of plastering or whether that was a delusion of Stokes growing out of his terror of Fisk, but the Court gave leave to the defense to introduce further authorities on this point.

The testimony of George A. Cole, taken on the previous trial, of Amasa Sprague, John L. Doty, Samuel Mc-Laughlin, Lawrence Carr, a hackman, now dead, was read by consent. The testimony of the hackman Carr, shows that on the fatal Saturday afternoon he drove Stokes from the City Hall to the Hoffman House, thence to the house of Miss Mansfield, and thence to the corner of Fourth street and Broadway. The most important parts of his testimony were that Stokes did not get out of the carriage at Miss Mansfield's house, but was apparently reading some papers when he jumped down to open the door, and was thereupon directed to drive down to the Grand Central Hotel; that he drove down Seventh av. by Stokes's direction, that he followed no other carriage, and that when Stokes got out at Eourth street he turned up Broadway, going at an ordinary pace. and that the prisoner looked somewhat pale and disturbed at the time. The Court here adjourned to Monday.

THE BAZAINE TRIAL.

Examination of the Marshal Continued-He Asserts that He gave Orders to Destroy the Flags.

VERSAILLES, Oct, 18, 1873. Upon the resumption of the Bazaine trial to-day the interrogation of the Marshal was continued. In answer to an inquiry why he did not destroy the forts and the war material before surrendering to the Germans, he replied that he feared the enemy would take revenge if he did so. Besides, the labor was too great.

The Duke d'Aumale, President of the Court, asked him what greater rigor could the enemy have shown than was imposed?

Bazaine replied in an evasive manner that such a destruction was unexampled; besides, he thought that Metz would revert to France. In reply to other questions in relation to the flags, the Marshal maintained that he publicly and distinctly ordered them to be destroyed. His orders were to have them all brought to the arsenal for immediate destruction.

This concluded the examination of the Marshal by the President. Bazaine afterward made a statement complaining of his book on Metz be State cs. Wm. Woodberry, charged with ing treated as a justificatory memoir, when the truth was, it was written from memory only without consulting any documents.

The Governmental Commissary interrogated him as to his knowledge of his wife's whereabouts, and asked him how he knew her address in September was at Tours. Bazaine, in answer, said he ascertained it from a German newspaper, and subsequently from a German offi

Lecture of Hon. A. M. Waddell.

The Sentinel thus refers to the lecture of Hon. A. M. Waddell at Wake Forest College: This distinguished gantleman delivered his lecture on the anti-Columbus history of North Carolina, at Wake Forest College, on the evening of October 15.
He was listened to with profound interest by his intelligent audience; and all were im-Red, in the year A. D., 1,000, that white men lived south of Chesapeake Bay; that the chronicles of Belend prove that at this early period Christian men inhabited Hvitramannaland—the White Man's Land—now North Carolina; that when Amadus and Barlowe visited Boanoke in the year 1584, they found among the aborigines entitives with blue eyes and subjurn hair—proving their Causesian descent, and that urged, before entering upon his pious task, to examine with care the records of Northern Europe, the contemporaneous narra-tives of voyages, and the archeology of the Icelanders; and he would most assuredly find, by the aid of these "Northern Lights," that the history of the Old State begins long before the period usually assigned to it.

Nash, the jailor, discovered that Cella Sauls and Viola down in their cell, which they occupied together, when he stiempted to take them out for the purpose of confining them in another cell, where they would be less linble to engage in such mischievous pranks. To this arrangement the two women, it seems, were not inclined to submit, and upon the officer's attempting to force them into measures they commenced a simultaneous and furious assault upon Finding that they were too much fer him Nash, sent for Deputy Sheriff Morris to come to his assistance, and the two attempted the task which had been found too much, under the circumstances, for one to successfully perform. They found the Amazons drawn up in line of battle, their "souls in arms and eager for the fray." The Deputy Sheriff, being highest in rank, ordered an immediate advance upon the enemy, when a desperate struggle ensued. For some time the result seemed in doubt, as the two women fought, scratched and bit with an energy and zeal worthy of a better cause-in fact the "colored troops fought nobly"-but they at last discovered that they were no match for the well-disciplined and determined foe with whom they had to deal, and so they laid down their arms and-the "bracelets" were fastened upon them, which will no doubt effectually prevent another such hostile demonstration on their part. These two women have the reputation of being quite desperate and cause a great deal of trouble.

Daring Adventure of a Horse-He

Swims the Cape Fear. Yesterday afternoon a horse belonging to Mr. W. G. Fowler, Sr., employed in hoisting the cargo of a vessel at the wharf of Messrs. Willard Bros., on Eagle's Island, suddenly walked to the edge of the wharf and plunged into the river. The hoisting apparatus was fastened to him at the time but in the descent this became detached. It is not believed the animal contemplated suicide, but that he simply got the notion in his head that he was on the wrong side of the river. At all events he made lively efforts to reach the eastern shore, showing that his early education in the art of swimming had not been entirely neglected. The current, however, interfered with his movements and was fast drifting him down the stream, the wharves in the meantime being partially filled by an excited crowd, who were witnessing the efforts of the gallant steed to reach terra firma. Finally, several daring and adventurous spirits heroically rushed to the rescue of the almost exhausted beast, in boats which they had secured for the purpose, got hold of the bridle or halter which was still attached to the animal and towed him into Market dock when he soon had the satisfaction of once more finding himself in his native

A Colt on the Rampage.

A runaway colt created considerable excitement on Orange street yesterday morning, causing a panic among pedestrians, many of whom "changed their base" with the utmost alscrity. In turning the corner of Front and Orange the animal took possession of the sidewalk, flanked a baby carriage and narrowly escaped making an "item" of the servant and her innocent charge. All such frisky colts should be arrested for "disorderly conduct."
