- The Statesville Lundmark says that a man named Denny was recently bit that a man named Denny was recently bit ten on the foot by a poisonous snake called the rattlesnake's vilos. Let the Landmark's correspondent relate how the poisoned man was cured: "When Denny got to where I was—about fifty yards from where he was latten—the blood was oozing out of his foot from two places. I bandaged his leg at once and administered whiskey in copious draughts, giving him in all about a half gallon. I then had a chicken caught and had lon. I then had a chicken caught and had the feathers picked clean from its hind parts and applied the nude part of the fowl to the bite, pressing against it gently. In a few minutes the chicken commenced ganing and its the chicken commenced. gaping and instantly died, without even a struggle. Immediately succeeding this the man commenced vomiting and vomited freely for half an hour. He then became perfectly quiet, went to sleep, slept sound ly for several hours—woke up, and appeared as hearty and cheerful as ever, and is now at work." Mr. Burgess, says the Landmark, is an intelligent and reliable farmer, and these facts, as he states them, cannot be improved.

A Rowing Race.

A rowing race, in which a number of very young men of our city will be the participators, is spoken of as a river amusement for next Monday afternoon. The arrangement thus far is to have five boats competing, each manned by a crew of the young men. The first prize will be appropriate and valuable. The extent of the course and other arrangements will be announced hereafter.

- The Cornet Concert Club, it will be borne in mind, open their series of concerts on Sunset Hill to-night. Ample accommodations have been made for comfortably seating a number of persons by means of benches on the hill.

Our streets on these summer evenings bear the impress of quietness. The tones of the bell are heard at 71 o'clock and then the worn and weary clerk with a light heart closes the store door, and soon after even settled down to a quiet and seemingly breathless monotony that lasts throughout the night. It would be vain, however, to think because the business portion of the city is quiet that that stillness which it breathes is coexistant with the city. On many a quiet street may be seen couples enjoying a moonlight stroll, while sweet
