ANTIQUE AMBRICANS.

A victorious race usually feels very slight interest in the genealogy of its victims, says the Chicago Tr hone. It is not probable that the Spartans investigated very closely the ancestry of the Helots. The defeat and destruction of the successive population of America has thus aided in the creation of the mystery that hangs over the primitive races. It is known that civilization retrograded here, step by step, until the European explorers found the "strange new world that yet was never young" inhabited by mere barbarians. One of the world's puzzles is the original settlement of America. Voltaire's suggestion for its solution was that when God was making flies in America He might as well have made men too. The repetition of this bit of flippant wit during the session of the recent "American Congress" at Nancy; in Lorraine, nearly cost that body the support of the Catholic clergy of France. This Congress attracted far more attention abroad than it did here. Its debates and decisions were of great value. It destroyed rather than constructed, and left its hall lit-

The theory of the Phonician discovery of America was the first discussion. The "Dighton Rock" of Massachusetts, which has been supposed to bear a Phænican inscription, was dismissed with the statement, quoted from Francis Parman, that the characters graven on the rock merely tell the story of a fight between two Indian tribes. Another cariously-inscribed stone, found near St. Louis, has imprints like those in the temples of Karnak, in Egypt. This rock, however, was but a featherweight in the minds of the scientists. They registered a verdict of "not proven" on the Phænician claim, and came near saying something much more decided.

The story of "Fu-Sanz, which Chas. (i. Leland has just elaborated with s, much care, fared no better. Buddusm was relieved from the charge of having inspired the religion of ancient Mexico. The zoology and botany shown to be wholly different from and the fifth-century mission of the Buddhist monks of Samarcand to America was bowed away as a mere romance.

The Norse theory received more respect. The Icelanders really landed on the (then) vine-clad coast of New England. In the twelfth century Bishop Eric preached in some American town in behalf of the crusades. His colony forworded skins as a contribution to partly defray the expenses of one of the expeditions. in 1107, Mr. and Mrs. Anor, Iceland ers, were living somewhere in what is now Massachusetts and Connecticut, and had a son born there. From this son the great sculptor, Thorwaldsen, was descended.

Some queer scattering theories were broached. One servant had a little map with a careful and of course perfectly accurate sketch of the "ten ost tribes" across Asia and into America. A letter was read from a Swede in Kansas, who says he can converse with perfect ease with the Indians of that State, so much alike are his and their languages. A grave professor stated that the Esquimanx dances resembled those of the Malays, so that the former must have come from Aissa. It only remains now to find some tribe which flings its legs about as David did when he danced on a certain solemn occasion, in order to prove the identity of the lost Hebrew tribes and the Western Silver Coinage.

It being proposed to substitute silver coin for our fractional currency, he government has been buying largely of silver bars at $122 $125 per ounce. In this connection the New York Journal of Commerce suggests that a very convenient tandand can be adopted by fixing the half dollar at 180 grains-other denominations being in the same proportion. This will give seventy-five ounces of standard silver to each one hundred dollars, and the premium for gold must run above 120 before disturbing silves coin of that stand-

A Sensible Northern Comment. [New York Tribune.] It is not often that such scenes of popular excitement as were witnessed ast week in Eastern Georgia are allowed to pass away without the shed-ding of blood. That the whites and blacks in the lately disturbed section are not murdering each other to-day is owing to the discretion of Governor Smith and to a general respect for law and order, no less than to that kindly feeling between the better class of men in either race which has been displayed by the people of Georgia in many ways during the past few years, and which has gained for their State a reputation for good order like that of Virginia and North Carolina. Our special from Augusta, which gives the only connected and intelligible account of the recent scare vet published, shows that the apprehensions of the whites were not groundless, but that the negroes who were at the bottom of the plot were probably actuated by desire for notoriety and power more than by any malicious motive, while many who were committed to the movement

The Races in Georgia. In 1870 the population of Georgia consisted of 638,926 whites and 545,-142 blacks. The countries of Jefferson, Burke and Washington, the scene of the alleged insurrection, have each a large majority of colored people. Burke has 4,243 whites and 13,-436 blacks; Jefferson 4,247 whites gramme. and 7,943 blacks, and Washington has 7,530 whites to 8,312 blacks. The borders of these three counties adjoin, and their relative strength is cently. 16,020 whites, 29,691 blacks. But these are the figures of the census of 1870, and there is probability that the relative proportion is now changed more favorably for the whites. It is difficult to conjecture any reason for persistent in the presentation of their bills an insurrection in Georgia, says the as the fall approaches. tered with the remains of romances. > mainly owing to the distance from that part of the city to the central market, and the residents of the neighborhood seem more and more to encourage this tendency by giving their patronage to the local merchants. Where there is a decided tendency of business to a street the stores will first increase in numbers, and as they become better established and more liberally patronized they will improve in appearance and in the quality and assortment of goods kept. As the possession of good stores in any neighborhood is a great convenience to the residents, property on streets in the vicinity will tend to become more valuable, to a great extent, just in proportion as the stores pecome more prosperous and are able to afford greater and greater facilities and conveniences to their patrons. This is well shown in the case of Fourth street by the march of improvement in that direction. In looking over the city some days ago, while preparing a recent article on our building interests, this matter was brought forcibly to our notice, but we did not then have time to make any comment. Any one who looks into the matter will scarcely fail to notice the great number of buildings now going up on Fourth and the streets in its vicinity in the northern part of the city. and to connect them in his mind with the conveniences due to the good stores and
