PROM WASHINGTON. The Pledges to the South-How an by Whom They Were Made. [Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun. WASHINGTON, March 25.

It was mentioned in these dispatches on Friday night last that the proof would be forthcoming at the proper time to show that the Southern members of Congress who prevented the defeat of the electoral count had assurances from those who were authorized to speak for Mr. Hayes, that he would, on attaining to the Presidency, give to the South the same rights of local self-government as not say so, the distinct understandwere exercised by the North. The | ing all around was that he was regives a statement of all the circumstances connected with this affair, and may be relied upon as thoroughly accurate, as it is obtained from sources which cannot be ques-

During the progress of the electoral count, and after the Electoral Commission had, by its grossly unfair and partisan rulings, made apparent its deliberate intention to give all the disputed States to Hayes and Wheeler, Senator Gordon went over to the House Hall and had an interview with Representative Foster. Gen. Gordon said to Mr. Foster that while he felt no responsibility for the action of the House, yet he should insist upon it that the South should have guarantees that their State governments should not be interfered with; that they had contended for the past ten years for this right, and that if such pledges were not given he (Gordon) would go into the House and urge upon his Southern friends to assist in preventing the further progress of the count. Senator Gordon repeated that he was not responsible for what the House did, but he would certainly favor filibustering if there were no guarantees that the bayonet rule of the past eight years was to be abolished. Mr. Foster replied that all the necessary pledges would be given, and that President Hayes would certainly do what was right and proper towards the South. Mr. Foster also showed to Gen. Gordon a letter which he had received from President Hayes after the speech made by him in the House of Representatives on the 20th of February. In that speech Mr. Foster said when Governor Hayes attained to the Presidency he would be the President of the whole people, and under his administration the flag should float ments exactly. Gen. Gordon said such language was encouraging, but that he would like to have something more definite. Mr. Foster then, over his own signature, addressed a letter to Gen. Gordon and to John Young Brown, of Kentucky, who was pre-sent at the interview. In this letter, bearing date of February 27, 1877, Mr. Foster says:

"I feel authorized to guarantee that the people of South Carolina and Louisians will be allowed to administer their governments without any interference on the part of President Hayes, should be be inaugurated," and also "that there will be no fur-over States, not provinces, and that the people of the South should be permitted to exercise the same rights of local self-government as the peo-ple of the North. In the letter of President Hayes to Mr. Foster, he said that Foster had made just such a speech as he would have made himself, and that it represented his sentiments by troops, unless to preserve the peace according to law." Mr. Stanley Matthews also wrote letter addressed to Gen. Gordon, i which he said, "that knowing Hayes" views and purposes intimately, he felt satisfied that the Southern States would be permitted to conduct their local affairs in their own way without interference from Hayes or the ther interference in State govern-

It is understood that in addition to these written pledges, Gen. Garfield werbally made promises of a substantially similar character. Senators Bayard and Johnston, upon the strength of these pledges, urged upon the Southern members to withdraw all opposition and let the count go good place as teacher. He commend-

Mr. Hayes, when he became President, would treat them just as the states of the North were treated.

All of the circumstances above narrated were brought to the attention of the President this evening, and he denied with some feeling that he had any knowledge of such pledges, or that any one was authorized to make them for him. Technically there is no question that the President is perfectly correct in this statement, for his friends who spoke for him did not assume to say in so many words that he authorized them to speak as they did. Notwithstanding this, however, there will be few who will say that the Southern members were not justified, under all the circumstances, in accepting as authorita-tive the pledges which were made to them. Several of the members of the Cabinet were spoken to on the subject to-night. Secretary Mc-Crary said he knew nothing of such a compact, and is satisfied it was unauthorized. Secretary Sherman says he made no pledges for Hayes, but it is useless for the President to call they will vote the public money if it meets, if it finds the army confined to its legitimate employment, and the the army bill will be passed. If the contrary is the case the army will get prolong the session for several weeks.

[Special to Richmond Dispatch.]

To-day there is better feeling among Democrats here after thinking over the situation. They feel they practically have the South Carolina Destructive Fire on Topsail Sound. Yesterday moraing, about half past one o'clock, the grist mill, with adjoining build ings, machinery, &c., including a peanut picker and stemmer, the property of Mr. C. B. Futch, near Scott's Hill, on Topsail Sound, about ten miles below this city, were destroyed by fire. The buildings were located on grounds belonging to the old Futch homestead, where Capt. E. L. Pearce now resides. Capt. P. was aroused by the shouts of one of the colored laborers, and, upon going to the window, he found that the roofs of the buildings were falling in. and the property so nearly destroyed that nothing could be done to save the houses or their contents. Mr. Futch resides about one mile and a half from the homestead, and Capt. Pearce did not deem it necessary to notify him of his loss until after day—

The buildings contained about two hundred bushels of fancy peanuts and from seven hundred to eight hundred bushels of a second class article. early in the morning.

There is no certainty as to the origination of the fire. A barefooted track was found leading to and from the scene of the conflagration, and this would suggest the idea that it might have been the work of an incendiary. It is possible, however, Mr. Futch thinks, that fire may have been accidentally dropped in the building by some one who went there after peanuts.

the STAR of the 21st, clipped from the Raleigh Observer, relative to feats of marksmanship in deer shooting, a gentleman of Whitehall, Bladen county, gives us a few instances coming under his own observation of somewhat remarkable feats in that line. Our correspondent says he knew a man by the name of Archibald Currie, who lived near the Cape Fear river and within two miles of Whitehall, who killed two deer at one fire with a shot-gun. They ran up near him and stopped, when he fired and dropped both in their tracks. Another gentleman, by the name of Archibald Buie, who lived about eight miles from the Cape Fear river, and not very far from Whitehall, also shot and killed two deer at one fire with an ordinary squirrel rifle. The facts connected with this somewhat remarkable display of skill lend interest to the feat. Our correspondent accompanied Mr. Buie on this hunting expedition, it being intended as a sort of celebration of the old gentleman's 77th birthday. Mr. B. took his stand, while our friend and one of Mr. B.'s sons, with the dogs, took upon themselves the duty of driving the deer. The dogs started two fine ones, and they ran to a point within the distance of 77 feet from the venerable marksman and suddenly halted, when he fired upon them and both dropped in their tracks. As we remarked Mr. Buie was 77 years old on that day and the deer were 77 steps distant, by actual measurement, when he discharged his rifle and brought them both to the ground. Our friend says he himself shot and killed two squirrels up one tree at one fire, using s small shot gun, and at another time he killed two partridges at one fire with a small rifle, at a distance of seventy-five yards. He also mentions the fact that three hounds of inquest was to have been held over the his attacked and killed one of the largest wildcats ever seen in that part of the co try and totals boon and notion a Vi In hunting exploits North Carolina can
