EVENING EDITION

TURKISH BUTCHERIES.

There is nothing more horrible in the last two hundred years than the butcheries perpetrated by the Turks at Eski Saghra after its evacuation by the Russians. Men, women and children, to the number of from between 12,000 and 15,000, were either shot down as they emerged from their homes, or were burnt alive in their houses. Not only so, but the worse than barbarians, not satisfied with their cruelties to the helpless-not content with slaying and outraging, burnt and destroyed all the property-owned by Christians all over the Tchircan district. In addition to the awful loss of life, and the unimagined sufferings of the victims of the monstrous barbarities, the Turks are reported to have destroyed three hundred churches and five hundred schools and colleges. We presume there is no doubt of the correctness of the accounts of the awful visitation upon the unfortunate Christians, for both the correspondent of the London Times and the News give statements of the massa cre, especially at Eski Saghra.

What will the civilized world say of such stupendous crimes, such atrocious barbarities? Will Germany and England and the remainder of the world look upon such hideous scenes-such wholesale butchery, and yet raise no hand to arrest, raise no voice to condemn, to denounce? Or will the Christian nations continue their sympathy with the cause of brutes and barbarians who disgrace the human form, and who should be driven from Europe where they are intruders and oppressors?

It would indeed be a curious, a repellant incident in England's career if she were to become the ally of a people who are controlled by aggressive fanaticism, and whose mission is death and destruction to Christians and Christianity. The Queen in her speech upon the proroguing of Parliament spoke of England's neutrality, of her desire to interfere in the interests of peace when occasion offered, and her confidence in her people to vindicate and maintain the rights of her Empire "if enlieve, after this. England is Protestant to the core, and her people will never sustain a Ministry that makes war as the ally of cut-throats, house-burners and barbarians. Mr. Gladstone and his sympathizers receive powerful aid, a new and resistless ally, in the sad and fearful accounts that Englishmen have sent from the East.

The English Government is actual-

UNITY AND DISCIPLINE.

It requires more wisdom to use a victory wisely than it does to gain it There is more danger to a party when it is largely in the ascendant than when it is struggling for victory, or is only a little stronger than the enemy. The country understands the Republican party. That party has a history extending back through nearly twenty years. It has brought unmeasured afflictions upon our land. It has visited untold sorrow, untold evils upon the South. Our people are not ignorant of what has been done. They will never forget the pains and penalties of the past. It is then of the first importance that the organization of the Democratic party should be strictly maintained in every State. It will never do for it to be defeated in the South through discords and bickerings, The very safety of civil liberty-the conservation of a Republican form of government in our land rests solely upon the strength, fidelity and unity of this

Holding these views, which we have often expressed during the last four or five months, we are glad to see that Senator Beck, of Kentucky, in a speech on the political situations delivered on August 4th, has discussed fercibly and carnestly the necessity of harmony and of strict party discipline. We copy a few salient utterances from his vigorous address. After referring to the progress of Democratic principles and policy, and giving encouragement by a survey of the field, he said:

"With such prospects, with such a cause, when we all know that success is only possible through unity of action and purpose; when the only tactics left to the enemy is to divide in order to conquer us, it seems to me to be the very extreme of madness and folly for Democrats now to allow anything to separate or weaken them. I can hardly understand how men can run 'independent' or vote for 'independents' at a time like this. I fully appreciate the policy of Radicals, who cannot elect a member of their own party, fostering discontent and placing in office refractory or rebellious Democrats; but how any Democrat can either abandon or weaken the power or the discipline of his party now passes my

"The organization and discipline of a party must be as compact as that of an army. Our strength in Kentucky is our most dangerous source of weakness. Personal wrangles for place rarely divide us when our opponents are equal, or nearly equal, in strength; they spring up and de stroy us when the opposition can only be felt in our dissensions by throwing its weight into one scale or the other. That s their policy now, all over Kentucky Strict party discipline alone can counteract * You know that the enemy would never support a soldier in any conflict, civil or military, who is not in their opinion aiding their cause and weakening the man they are seeking to defeat. I repeat, our only safety is in unity, subordination to party discipline, obedience to the will of the majority.'

CROTCHETS,

We knew an excellent man, now dead, who was horrified when he saw a professing Christian reading a good story. He thought it a great sin. The same excellent man wanted to publish a series of school-books that should contain none of Æsop's fables, for, said he, they are nothing but lies. He thus made war upon two forms of literature, examples of which may be found more or less in the Bible. His crotchet was to condemn everything that was imaginative or fauciful, and not serious, simple, and matter-of-fact. We were reminded of a good man's narrow way of regarding life and letters, by the following enjoyable paragraph in the Richmond Christian Advocate, from that clerical wit, "Brother Lafferty," who is so well named: "Dr. Lovick Pierce, nigh unto a hundred, has found a new target, unslings his "Creedmoor," and is a firing away. He is now emptying his cartridge-box at "Pic-torial Idolatry"—that is, illustrated litera-ture. Dr. Deems' Sunday Magazine is specially sighted and shot at. It seems to us we once saw a "profusely embellished book-a pantheon of "Pictorial Idolatry the Smithson Methodist Pulpit; and, our memory serves us right," there was costly engraving in it of Dr. Lovick Pierce.

ANOTHER PROPRECY. We gave extracts recently from very remarkable letter written by the late eminent Lord Macaulay concerning the future of our country. W. find in an exchange another prophetic warning from one of the most distin-England has had in the Senate since the death of Daniel Webster. He hated the South, he was a fanatic of the first water, but he had large learning and very high abilities. Before his death he became a wiser and, we may hope, a better man. He saw the dangers that beset the progress of our country. He and others had helped to sow the dragon's teeth of ly taxed $32,500,000 to buy food to sort of prevision of the country's worth considering. Other men animated by higher motives, and with a clearer conception of the genius of our institutions, might assume the prophet's robe and foretell equal disaster to a country that within the first century of its existence ignored the great chart of its liberties, and threw to the winds the great principles of honor and justice and humanity. What could be expected of a people who stood by those who proclaimed that most dangerous and pestilential of doctrines-that there was a law for their guidance, and, to which they bowed, that was higher than the constitution of their country and which they had solemnly sworn to uphold and defend? Here is the prophesy and its history:

"The Pottsville (Pa.) Standard relates that at a dinner given by Mr. Sumner to a few friends, a short time before his final illness, he drifted at length upon what appeared to him to be the future of the American Republic. His manner was particularly serious, and he announced his convictions with a solemnity of tone which affected his auditors profoundly. He concluded his harangue in these words:

"'I won't live to see it; but you will, gen tlemen; you will if you live to be as old as I am now; you will see the streets of our cities run with blood, and the blood will be the blood of our own people, by our own people. The future of America looks very Good government in South Carolina is appreciated by the colored people. They are seeing what is the difference in the peace, prosperity and happiness under benignant sway and when thieves rule the roast. We copy the following encouraging paragraph from a Republican paper, the Baltimore American:

"In South Carolina some of the negroes, before the Hampton-Chamberlain controversy was settled, paid their taxes to Johnson, the Republican State Treasurer, at the Republican tax rate of twenty-two mills on the dollar. The money is now returning to them through Mr. Johnson's hands, and as they can pay the Hampton taxes at the rate of twelve mills on the dollar and keep the remainder, they are already enjoying one of the practical benefits of a reformed financial administration in the State."

Gen. Sheridan thinks that Col. Gibbon's battle with the Nez Perces is a victory. It may be so, but it would not surprise us if Chief Joseph did not wear Howard's scalp as a trophy yet. The trouble is that somebody else does the fighting and O. O. H. does the blowing. But, as the poem we published yesterday

CURRENT COMMENT.

- President Hayes is too strong in the confidence of the country for Jim Blaine to jostle him in the saddle. The conservative elements of all sections of the Union have crystallized around him. He is a high man in a high place, and with weighty responsibilities upon him. But he has shown himself a man in his mastery of his surroundings and in his patriotic sense of the situation .-Richmond Whig, Dem.

- President Hayes hits the popular thought when he appeals to his friends in Vermont to remember that these are hard times, and to forbear spending money on bouquets and expensive receptions for him during his visit. A good square hand-shake, he thinks, is better than any quantity of splurge. He doesn't seem to care much for finger-bowls and full-dress parties, but he enjoys the quiet recognition and approval of the com-mon people. There is sense as well as comfort in this, and his course will make him friends wherever he travels. -N. Y. Graphic, Rep.

----- The imp of repudiation has captured the Constitutional Convention of Georgia. It is sad and disappointing to see a body which had shown so much good sense in its proceedings fall an easy prey to that malign power. Having the future fame and welfare of the State in its keeping, the Convention has deliberately bartered these away for the sake of a divorce and the foreman married her the dangered or assailed." There will guished men of the country. Charles present ease and comfort. Of course same day. epudiation is the popular side to take in Georgia. So it was in Minnesota, Michigan and Arkansas. So it would be in many communities where the people are not rich, and have borrowed money from distant capitalists and invested it in enterprises that do not pay, and this is especially the case where the funds so obtained were stolen, or wholly wasted or spent in supporting oppressive and hated local governments. Human nature in Georgia does not differ from the article elsediscord and injustice, of false political where found in abundance, if it philosophy and ethics, and he had a pleads technical informality or illegality of some kind as an excuse for of the Convention. But they are safe in supposing that their constituents will approve, by a round majority, their action on Thursday. They have bought peace and temporary popularity by that vote of 166 to 16, but they have hurt the reputation of Georgia, and dealt her credit a blow from which it will never recover till this bad step is retracted. -N. Y. Journal of Commerce, Ind.

OUR STATE CONTEMPORARIES.

Should a vote be ordered in North Carolina to day involving the question of the endorsement of the President's course to the extent named, an affirmative return of a vast majority of our voting population would be rendered. Upon the mere ques tion then, as to whether President Hayes has done right or wrong in his pacific ad . vances toward the Southern people, or whether the course pursued by him in allowing the affairs of the local governments of Louisiana and South Carolina to be settled by the people of those States in accordance with the spirit and intent of the framework of our government was proper or wrong, there can be but little diversity of opinion. In fact, these questions admit no longer of serious discussion; both parties stand upon the common platform of endorsement; only faction, born of hatred and strife, represents an opposing element -Raleigh Register, Rep.

While this speaks well for Mr. Hayes, it argues badly for the return of the "era of good feeling" of which we have heard so much and seen so little. It is not claimed by the dissatisfied Republicans that Mr. Hayes has been guilty of anything except conservatism, and this is the crime which damns him. Seeing that perfect peace reigned in South Carolina and Louisiana, and that the presence of troops in those States was not only not necessary but worked injustice to the people, being used as they were to uphold governments upon which the seal of popular condemnation had been placed, he withdrew those troops and allowed the governments of the people to assume sway. In doing this Mr. Hayes violated no principle of law; be, departed naught from the platform on which he stood during the campaign, but the enmity which he has brought upon himself within the ranks of his own party, proves that he has run counter to the most cherished sentiment of the Republican leaders of the North, which is hatred of the South and a steady purpose to deny it every political right which can by any pretence be withheld from it. - Charlotte Observer.
