THE NEGROES HEARD FROM. An Indignant Protest against the

Radical Scheme of Disfranchise-P. B. S. Pinchback's New Orleans Loui-

Sianian. Now that events have proved that the giving of the ballot to the negro was not a successful adjunct of reconstruction, and does not tend to increase the numerical strength of the Republican party in the halls of Congress, we find Northern newspapers, "stalwart" journals, trying to mould public sentiment to secure the disfranchisement of the negro. Not only is it proposed to eliminate the representation of 200,000 blacks in South Carolina, Mississippi and Louisiana, but other suggestions have been made that the whole race, or rather that part of it who happen to live on Southern territory, shall share the

These are remarkable suggestions, and tend to show to what an extreme our Northern sympathizers will go in their mad effort to curtail Southern power and influence in national legislation.

If we cannot exercise the rights of citizenship now, will we be likely to do so when stripped of its privileges? No; that kind of argument will not do. The cruelty practiced by one section will not justify desertion on the part of the other. Between the two, we would rather endure cruelty, with its attendant hardships, than desertion, with its baneful influences and effects. Cruelty to class or color can be stopped by the healthy and judicious exercise of constitutional power on the part of the General Government. There must be no middle or half-way ground, howvery easy it is for us to stop this cry of intimidation? What a spectacle it would be to see our Northern rates. It then gives its reasons for so dofriends lowering the "bloody shirt" which they have flaunted so long and well. We warn them not to let their suggestions take the form of legislation. Our own preservation might lead us to vote the Democratic ticket without boing driven to do so by means of violence. Let us hear no more, then, of the disfranchisement ther. A Dangerous Practice.

Our attention has been called to a dangerous practice which may cause serious results if persisted in. We allude to the reckless shooting of gans and pistols in the vicinity of Oakdale Cemetery. A gentleman informs us that while walking through the cemetery recently he was astonished by hearing a bullet whiz by his head, and, stopping abruptly, heard the bushes cut by others as they passed in close proximity. Naturally thinking his position a dangerous one he left the spot for one more sheltered. Meeting a colored employe he asked him if he had heard any shot fall anywhere near him, and was answered in the affirmative, the man stating that he also had become alarmed on that account and had retreated. The shots came from the direction of the Athletic Grounds, and were probably fired by some thoughtless persons, but it is a crime not to think sometimes, and sportsmen and others should be very careful in what direction they aim when shooting so near the city and in the vicinity of the "city of the dead," which is visited so often and by so many people.

Black Hiver Steambont and Navigation Company. The steamer Isis, Capt. b. W. Skinner, belonging to the above company, is now being thoroughly overhauled and refitted. It is expected that she will be ready to commence running regularly between this city and Point Caswell on or about the 3rd of February.

Capt. R. P. Paddison, formerly of the steamer North East, whose place the Isis. fills, is the general agent of the company. We learn that the loss of the North East has caused considerable inconvenience to shippers, who are compelled at present to resort to the use of flats to move their produce. Fortunately they will not have to wait long before the line is again reopened, and a steamer running regularly. After the Melidays butter no.

There is generally a calm after a storm as well as before, but we are afraid if the present calm and peaceful state of local affairs continues some of the local reporters will have to commit suicide simply as an act of charity to the others. We want to know if this state of things hasn't gone on 'about long enough. Ain't it about time for a reOPERA HOUSE.

Address of Hon. George Bayls. In spite of the intense cold a large and refined audience, in which the ladies were nominally very strong, assembled at the Opera House last night, to hear a historical address from Hon. George Davis;

Mr. A. H. VanBokkelen, President of the Chamber of Commerce, introduced Mr. Davis in a brief, but nest and appropriate speech, in which he referred in fitting terms to the self-escrifice of Lieut. Benner during the plague of last summer, and in behalf of whose widow and four hapless children Mr. Davis would speak.

Mr. Davis had selected certain historical points connected with the early history of the Cape Fear section of North Carolina as his subject. He confined himself chiefly to these points: the settlement of Charleston, eight miles below Wilmington; the vindication of the name and memory of Sir John Teamans, and the right name of the river and cape known as the Cape Fear. He established by convincing facts and arguments that the site of Charlestown or Charleston was on Old Town Creek. He made an ingenious, impressive, and, we think, satisfactory defence, of Sir John, and showed by irrefragable proof that Cape Fear was the correct orthography.

Mr. Davis did not confine himself to the clucidation of these points, but took a somewhat wide range into the domains of English history. These excursions, however brief, were full of life and interest, and were relieved by witty "asides," and pointed references to the present. The entire address, from the opening sentence to the very striking closing paragraph, was elegant, tasteful, instructive and impressive. At times he turned aside from the simple historical parrative to utter some pregnant thought that made the heart throb and the eye kindle. Whilst mainly plodding along the rough ways cut out by bold pioneers of the past, he now and then took the listener quently more money in the burg than there to the England of the seventeenth century. and gave him glimpses of those stirring times in which great "emprises" were conceived, and great men made their impress upon the age. We must not fail to note his very eloquent defence of the South, his noble and elegant portraiture of Sir Walter Raleigh, and his fine description of the Cape of Fear. Mr. Davis is an admirable reader: his voice is rich and sonorous, and when pathos moves him his tones become singularly effective, and, as Dryden said of another.

Words are like the notes of dying swans, Too sweet to last. Mr. Davis is an orator. When time and theme fit his bent of thought and culture, he has "an arrow for the heart," and can "draw and win still as night or summer's noontide air." He can thrill by his passion and charm by his eloquence. All who have heard him in his best moments, when inspiration kindled his mind and lit up his periods, will readily bear witness to the power and eloquence of the man. His fine taste, his familiarity with great writers, his dramatic gifts, his elegant vocabulary, his pleasing art, all combine to make him one of the most accomplished and finished orators of the South. He is constantly delighting and surprising us with his apt quotations from the classics, ancient and modern, even if but a happy phrase or a line. When we hear him speak we can but pity the man who is not familiar with Shakespeare.

We take pleasure in saying this, not because we wish to gratify others merely o to air our own terms of praise, but because it is just and true. Eloquence among the ancients ranked only next to song. Petrarch regarded eloquence as even higher than poetry. Without accepting this as true, we think fine eloquence very much better than ordinary poetry, and believe that it is an endowment so noble in itself as to deserve the honor and admiration of men.

He was brought up in an insensible condi tion, but an examination disclosed that no bones were broken. The fall was a distance of about fifteen feet. The man fell on his left hand side, mashing his hand badly, and bruising his side and face considerably. It is not thought his injuries are se-
