The report about a duel in prospectu between Capt. Kitchin, (who is a member of the Baptist Church,) and Judge Russell was without any foundation. According to Senator Vance, Kitchin is full of fight. The Washington Post asked him if Kitchin would fight:

"Fight! I should say he would! He'd fight a rattle-snake through a crack of the fence and give the snake the first bite. He's like Capt. Constantine in "Charles O'Malley." As a general thing he considers it the safest plan to fight every man, but he hasn't taken any steps towards fighting Russell

Chief Justice Waite has rendered a decree of foreclosure in the United States Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Virginia, Judges Hughes and Bond presiding, in which the sale of the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio Railroad is ordered. It provides the manner of sale of the road from which Norfolk derives its greatest benefit. The Virginian says the decree "preserves to the State of Virginia and the city of Norfolk the integrity of the road between Norfolk and Bristol." It adds that it is a "very satisfactory conclusion of a law-suit" to the people of Norfolk. The English bondholders are the plaintiffs.

The Richmond Dispatch's Washington correspondent says Hayes wil certainly veto the military-interference bill. Senator Withers says the Democrats have nothing to lose and all to gain by the veto. Senator Johnson, of Virginia, also says the Democrats should pass the army bill promptly and thereby give a quietus to the charge of a desire on the part of the Democratic party in Congress to starve the army. The veto will do the Republican party an immense deal of harm, and we have only to avoid committing any mistake to reap the full advantage of such wrong and impolitic act on the part of Mr. Haves. Mr. Kernan, of New York, who is also a Senator of cool judgment, took the same position and predicted a like result.

If Washington reports can be trusted old Zach Chandler was gloriously obluscated when he was makin months at the "Brigadiers" last week. He was as full as glorious Tam was when Burns described him as being

"O'er all the ills of life victorious," Old Zach had to hold on to his desk to keep it from flying up in his face and mashing his nose. According to accounts it was a rich anddisgusting seene. Suppose it had been a Southern man thus exposing himself, and accusing Conkling, Edmunds, Cameron and some other Republican Senators with holding their seats through fraud, how the moralists would have wept, and how "plantation manners" and "whip of the old slave drivers" would have been paraded.

The prospect now is that Hayes will veto the anti-bayonet bill. Edmunds made a speech for the purpose of giving back-bone to the de facto, and he succeeded, it is supposed. Ex-Secretary Robeson has interviewed the President, and he says he will certainly exercise his veto power. The Washington correspondent of the Richmond State anticipates a veto and says:

"The effect of a veto cannot safely be predicted now. After the first veto there were many Democrats who thought a compromise would be the right thing, and a few were willing to postpone the contest until next winter. They agreed to the Ladd bill as a fair and honest concession, and it is now believed that a rejection of that proposition would consolidate the Democrats and redound to the good of the party throughout the country. A few Republicans, like Chittenden, of New York, think a vete will be a useless show of power on the President's part, neither wise nor just; that the President, not the Democrats, will be blamed by the country for keeping up the agitation, and perhaps causing a failure of the appropriation bills. They argue that the Democrats dave done the fair thing and ought not to be asked to surrender unconditionally. A Republican Senator said to-day he didn't think the country was going to ruin whenever the Democrats shook a stick at it, but he believed that unless this bill was signed and they were met in a spirit of concession by the President, the situation would become critical."

OLD ZACH CHANDLER'S RAVINGS.

That was a stirring time in the Senate when old Zach-said to have been more than half drunk-said he believed there were twelve Democratic Senators who obtained and held their seats through fraud and violence. The Washington letter to the Richmond State gives an interesting account of what followed:

'The bold and insulting language had a visible effect upon the Democrats, but every one maintained his self-possession. Beck wriggled nervously in his seat and was full of fight, but he kept down. All eyes turned to that side as if expecting some impulsive Southerner would bound to his feet. But, to the astonishment of the Republicans, the Southern Senators simply treated the Speaker and the speech with silent contempt. That flery little Democrat, Eaton, of Connecticut, rese quickly and called Chandler to order, because his remarks were not only out of order. but highly insulting. Thurman ordered Chandler to sit down, and Eaton stated the objectionable language. Chandler stam-mered a half-way denial, but Garland rose and asked that the languaga be read by the official reporter. That being done, Eaton again stated his objections, and a warmblooded Democrat whispered across to Garland to 'demand the names of the Senators referred to and let the lie go on record. No attention was paid to the suggestion, except that Democrats shook their heads, and Conkling, overhearing the remark laughed until his face turned red. "It was a surprise, but it was fortunate, that the President pro tem., Thurman, ruled that Chandler's language did not contain a personal charge of fraud and violence on the part of Senators, and he was therefore, in order. Toere was some confusion, and suppressed excitement, so that Houston, of Alabama, not hearing the ruling, rose and requested Eaton to withdraw the point, as nobody believes what the Senator from Michigan has stated.'

THURMAN'S RULING meant that the fraud and violence were charged as the act of the people, not of Senators themselves. A Democrat remarks that if the ruling had been different everything was ready for a scene of extraordinary excitement."

Some ugly words ensued, and May attacked the doctor with his hickory cane, cutting his head in several places. Hagne, while the blood filled his eyes, drew a revolver and fired, missing his autagonist. During the melee, John Mitchell, a brother-in-law of Dr. Hagne, came to the scene of action, and with a rock proceeded to give the town marshal a lick that felled him to the ground, where he lay senseless for quite a time. To-Day's Indications. For the South Atlantic States, slowly falling barometer, easterly winds, stationary temperature, partly cloudy weather, and numerous rains, are the indications for this section to-day.

A Terrible Fall and a Narrow Escape. A little four-year old boy, the child of Mr. Thos. E. Skipper, who resides over Mr. Conley's drug store, on Fourth street, near Boney bridge, was playing on the upper piazza of the house, on Saturday evening, about half past 6 o'clock, when he accidentally fell over the balustrade to the wooden pavement below, a distance of about twelve feet. He was picked up, and found to be stunned to insensibility, and it was thought by his almost heart-broken mother that he was past all earthly help. A physician was sent for, and upon his arrival, after examination of the little fellow. he was able to announce, to the intense rehef of those most deeply interested, that no bones were broken, and that the little one was but slightly hurt. In fact, before bed-time arrived he was able to walk about the room, and slept as soundly that night as he had ever done in his life. He is now entirely recovered. It is considered on all sides one of the narrowest escapes on record.

The First Regatta. The avant courier of the first regatta of the Carolina Yacht Club, the Rosa, is already in port, and in a short time the whole fleet will be in our waters. This activity inspires confidence that before the 26th of May the Frolic, the Ripple, Lizzie, Restless, Gipsey, Carolina, Spray, and possibly other well known craft, will be fitting up for participation in the contest.

We understand that a committee has been appointed from the Club to visit our citizens in connection with the formation of the prize list. It is our full expectation and hope that the business men of the city will evince such a liberal disposition as may develop even greater competition for the trophies to be offered than has yet characterized any opening regatta.

Bellevue Cemetery. being made at Bellevue Cemetery. A nice drive has been constructed from the entrance to the grounds, with a row of trees on each side, which in time will ensure a handsome avenue. There are some very pretty lots, and others are being laid out and improved, while the grounds are being beautifully terraced, &c. The President, Captain E. W. Manning, appears to take a great deal of interest in the work of beautifying the Cemetery.

Personal and Hymenial. We learn that the Rev. Mr. Mendelsohn and bride are expected to arrive in this city on Thursday evening next. The wedding ceremony took place in Philadelphia on Sunday, the Rev. gentleman marrying a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Jastrow, of that city. A hearty welcome awaits the happy couple from the members of the congregation of the Temple of Israel, as well as their many friends in the community generally.

IN MEMORIAM.

MONROR.—At Bladenboro', Bladen County, on Monday 5th inst., Mrs. MARY IDA, wife of W. F. Monroe Esq., died very suddenly.

The death of a stranger startles us; the death of an acquaintance pains us; but language beggars itself in the fruitless effort to express the sorrow of a husband, whose loss is so irreparable as his, whose heart lies burfed in Ids Monroe's tomb.

Only three years ago, W. F. Monroe led to the marriage altar Mary Ida Robeson. From her ancestral roof, a home that from childhood had beamed with her sunny smile, Ida Robeson left a laughing, happy bride, the pride of her race and the idel of her husband, Last Tuesday, to that same home, then shrouded in sorrow, she was borne, not again a joyous bride, but a dead mether, her husband bowed down with grief, her little boy, his father's namesake, startled at such solemnity, at such mourning, at such tears; and terrified by that unconscious sentiment, so keenly felt but not clearly conscious sentiment, so keenly felt but not clearly understood by desolated childhood.

The daughter of James and Sarah A. Robeson was well worthy to be the wife of William F. Monroe. Intellectual, amiable, affectionate, she won all was well worthy to be the wife of William F. Monroe. Intellectual, amiable, affectionate, she won all hearts. As a wife, a mother, a friend, she was equally loved. The writer of this inadequate tribute to her memory, vividly remembers her graceful manners, her sweet smile, the kospitable nature. Often has he sat around her home-circle, herself the most agreeable of hostesses, while on her husband's face lay happiness perfect and serene, now and then expressing itself more openly by a proud and affectionate smile directed toward his happy wife and infant son.

—The schr. Lewis Clark, Capt. Smith, from Havana, and bound to New York, put in at Capt. Smith, from the company of the comp of St. Paul's Cemetery.

The writer will always feel nobler and happier, when remembering that he inspired friendship in the pure mind of ida Monroe and the warm heart of her widowed husband.
