By WILLIAM H. BERNARD.

WILMINGTON, N. C.: TJESDAY MORNING, May 27, 1879.

Well, we have read Senator Vance's maiden speech in the Senate of the United States. With deliberation we give it as our opinion that it is a capital effort. It is not the kind of speech we expected from the great humorist, but it is a better speech none the less than we looked for. It is lucid, forceful, and ingenious, with occasional scintillations of humor, but only enough to afford variety and give his hearers a little foretaste of what he could do if he were to pull off his coat and let himself out fully. He came near being the death of ex-Senators Stockton, Tipton and others from the North in 1872 when he spoke to a vast crowd at Weldon. If he were to fairly "spread himself" in the asecdotical line in the the grave Senators would have to betake themselves to the cloak-rooms to prevent explosion.

But the speech delivered is well worth reading. It is singularly practical and calm. It strikes us that the two speeches that would be best to circulate throughout the North, of all that were delivered in Congress by Southern Democrats, were made by two North Carolinians. We believe that both Senator Vance's and Col. Steele's speeches would be capital reading for the Northern people, and would do much good. They are so lucid, so plain, so good tempered, so truthful and elaborate in their portrayal of all that occurred in the South under the reign of the carpet-baggers in meconstruction times, that they are really historical contributions and should be widely disseminated.

We do not think Senator Vance's effort great like Ben Hill's remarkable speech. It is not elaborate and full of facts and arguments and quotations from books like Senator Beck's masterly effort. But it is a strong, well arranged, impressive discussion, and will please all who were not misled by gushing newspaper prophecies of what "Our Zeb" would do when he made his voice echo throughout the great chamber. The speech is argumentative, narrative, witty, very pointed, and at times eloquent. It is smoothly written and reads well. The part in which he resorts to the reductio ad absurdum argument, with his mathematical treatment of the Stalwarts, is really quite admirable. Of its sort it is simply inimitable. We would like to be able to repro-

We copy one paragraph because of its rhetorical excellence. The Senator says:

"When any Republican Senator has ven-tured for one moment to abandon the line of inflammatory appeal to the sectional feeling of the country, the excuses given for the retention of this law upon the statute-book are illogical almost to pue-

"One Senator gravely urges that it should not be repealed because the great bulk of the army is in the distant West, only some few hundreds being east of the Rocky Mountains. He tells us in the course of his enumeration that there are only about thirty in the State of North Carolina, and asks the the obvious faut that within thirty days ten thousand could be sent there if desired, I answer that we do fear them, because they represent the power of the United States Government and the enmity of the Republican party which wields that power; we fear them as the Hollander fears the first small leaks in the dikes which bear back the waves of the ocean from deluging the meadows of his homestead; we fear them as the physician fears the first speck of gaugrene in the system of his patient; we fear them as the sailor fears the piling up of the storm clouds upon the borizon, knowing that their deceptive beauty covers the fierce desolation of the tempest; we fear them as the shepherd of the mountain fears for his lambs at even the flitting of shadow athwart his path, for he knows it to be the shadow of the eagle, the remorseless tyrant of the air; we fear them as Charlemagne feared the rude wooden ships of the Norse Vikings on their first appear ance in the seas of his empire; we fear them as all patriotic Romans feared the crossing of the Rubicon by Cæsar, the passage which with arms in his hand marked him as the enemy of Roman liberty."

A NEW POET. Some eighteen months ago we re member to have read some very cordial praise of a new poem in two or three of the leading publications of Great Britain. It was a new poem by a new poet to us. It was entitled "The Epic of Hades," and was by the author of "Songs of Two Worlds," It was thought to give great promise of superior powers. We had lost sight of it until we saw a critical netice of it in the Baltimore Bulletin of the 21st inst. It says the author is "by all odds the most promising of the younger generation of English peets." It gives this account of the poem, which is interesting:

"The Epic of Hades" is a descriptive peem, reproducing in blank verse, with singular compactness of narrative and nobility of thought, as well as true poetic imagery and feeling, the principal Greek legends. It is divided into three books— Tartarus, Hades, and Olympus-and, therefore, deals with three classes of subjects namely, those who are doomed to torments. those who are passing through the intermediate state, and those who are in full ossession of the joys of Paradise. In the first class are Tantalus, Phædra, Sisyphus and Clytemnestra, who are tortured for sins which can never be atoned; in the second class are the victims of cruel fortune rather than of sin, such as Marsyas, Actaeon, Helen and others; and in the third class are the blest immortals who dwell in Olympus. The first thought of the casual reader in taking up the book and glancing over it is, 'I have seen all this before,' but a closer inspection will convince the most hasty critic that the author is worthy to tak his place in the front rank of English master-singers. The poet is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of his song, which throughout, is Greek in its simplicity and purity as well as in its majestic strength and repose."

It is a matter of surprise that some American publisher, on the lookout fo works of original and striking genius did not publish an edition for thi country. The Bulletin says that the want has been supplied at last by Roberts Brothers, Boston. As a true singer is heaven-born, we make a not for the benefit of those of our reader who like new as well as old poetry.

SOME NEW POINTS CONCERNING CAPITAL AND LABOR.

Our Northern exchanges for a year or so past have had a great deal to say about capital and labor. The eading periodicals have also been discussing the important question. There appears to be nearly as much contrariety of opinion as there are writers. Each one has his remedy for the great and growing evil, to-wit, the antagonism between capital and labor, and the pauperism and vagrancy that have followed as consequence. Each writer admits that there is a conflict, that there are distress and vagrancy, and that the vils are on the increase.

But our object is not to discuss somewhat trite theme, but to sho how time brings its revenges to al who will wait patiently.

"Time at last sets all things even, And if we do but watch the hour, There never yet was human power Which could evade, if unforgiven, The patient search and vigil long Of those who treasure up a wrong-

In the North the writers and thinkers are brought face to face with a difficulty that the South had to meet long years ago. The principles of political economy that were adopted such principles as reduced men to nachines and made money-making the chief end of life. But the economists are learning something in the chool of experience. They are disphy and the science of pelitical economy, as expounded in the Northern | in Congress it says: schools, are not after all quite as perfect as they supposed before the war. In the International Review for September, 1878, there is a paper by President Chadbourne, of Williams

His theme is-"Cry of Labor; What Answer?" These who have read the essays of Horace Mann and writers of that class who believe that education is the greatest boon ever vouchsafed to man, and that the greatest discovery of the world was the common school system, as Mann held, will be somewhat surprised to learn that educators in the North are beginning to find out that popular education is not the great cure-all of crime and suffering and poverty that they once were led to believe. President Chadbourne makes some honest confessions, and admits that avoided.

there is no cure for the labor troubles in popular education-that "it brings the condition of fever to the patient, but has thus far, to masses, offered no prevention and no cure." The fact is, the publicists are evidently fairly at sea in their efforts to grapple with the serious problem of the relation of labor to capital They have at last discovered that "hireling society" offers no solution of the difficulty. President Chadbourne, according to the Southern Presbyterian Review, "confesses that whatever Northern labor presented of prosperity or comfort was not due to its right organization, but to the accident of possessing a wide and fresh virgin soil to ravage; and that as soon as it was tested by any strain, it disclosed itself a failure." His remedy is very radical. He thinks the civil government ought to regulate both capital and labor. Capitalists must not be allowed to get labor at the lowest market price. Capital, ists must pay enough wages to allow employes to live in haman decency to rear families intelligently, and to lay up "for a rainy day." As to laborers, they are to be compelled by law "to apply their adequate wages" the three ends just mentioned. The unemployed class are "wards of society," and must be made to work.

This is, very briefly, the plan proposed. If this plan looks oppressive, or resembles slavery, or interferes with individual liberty, never mind that. He says: "We have listened to this cry long enough." He then lays down an axiom that reads strangely, coming from a section that has made war on African slavery for three-quarters of a century. He says:

Whatever is essential to the preservation of society can never be against individual rights, but must be for them."

Now, this is indeed very remarkable. This was a main argument used by some of the defenders of bourne does not believe that "our fine ideas about freedom" should prevent the civil government from dealing with pauper classes and those who do not work. He says that the civil government should not wait for the laborers "to come to prison or alms house before we care for them by controlling them." He thinks they should be taken in hand "through organized forms of law," and that society (civil government) should "become their guardian before they are sentenced as criminals." rever tan I aged all no n

Here we have it set forth that civil government shall regulate labor, shall fix the prices of remuneration, thus dictating to employers, and shall become the masters of paupers and idlers. Not only so, but the laboring classes are to be regulated in the manner they are to spend their money. Such is the "guardianship" advocated in the North. If the civil government were to be vested with such more than autocratic powers, the patronage of the "powers that be" would be immensely increased. The whole thing is a monstrosity. For men to talk about regulating capital and labor after that sort is all nonsense. Neither class would tolerate it for a mement. We have referred to the matter to show how perplexing is the problem, how wild some of the remedies proposed, and how great the changes that have been wrought by necessity and experience in the Northern mind! had bee bled etc tenwo to

The Boston Herald has decided leanings to the Republican party, if we may judge from the tone of its editorials generally. It is, however, sufficiently independent in its utterances to prevent it from being classed by our Northern cousins were just I as an organ. Indeed, it is sometimes described as Democratic, with independent proclivities. It is at any rate the most widely read paper in New England. It is because of this we turn to it now and then to see what covering that the utilitarian phileso- it has to say of the South and Congress. Referring to the Democrats

> "To present their case to the country without prejudice, they must not appear as obstructionists. If they fail to pass the appropriation bills, they will be accused, and with some reason, of menacing the government with revolution. That will bury them under overwhelming majorities next year. Whatever may be thought of the President's position, the true policy for the Democrats position, the true policy for the Democrats is to pass the apprepriation bills and go home. They have already made enough political capital for their opponents by prolonging the session and opening a sectional discussion for which there was no demand.
> * * If they do not now let the question go to the people for decision, they will display distrust of their own convictions. If they go to the people handicapped by any extreme act, they will be defeated. They have driven the Republicans, they claim to an extreme position. It is their cue now to be moderate and satisfy the conservative masses that they mean no harm to the Constitution, but obedience to and, defence of its letter and spirit."

> The meavers and spinners in Fall River, Mass., held separate meetings. Saturday evening, and sach adopted resolutions, to the end that amicable arrangements may be made with their employers and the invertible miseries attending a strike be

CURRENT COMMENT.

"Never was the Republican party more important to the country than now; and never did it stand in greater need of reliable exponents of its policy." -- Philadelphia Press. The first proposition is a piece of partisan mpudence and unmitigated cheek. The second is not true, because John Logan, Zachariah Chandler, Conger and Conkling are very reliable expo-nents of the party's policy, which may be condensed in the expression, "Bayonets and frauds at elections." Courier- Journal, Dem.

As Colonel Barre said in reoly to Lord North in Parliament, 1774, and in opposition to subjecting the people of the American colonies to military control: "No man is to be trusted in such a situation. It is not the fault of the soldier but the voice of human nature which, unbridled by law, becomes insolent and licentious, wantonly violates the peace of socie ty and tramples upon the rights of human kind." So long as constitutional liberty is cherished by the American people, so long will the military be kept under subjection to the civil power, and elections be conducted without the presence of soldiers under the pretext of keeping perce. - Cincinnati Enquirer, Cape Pear & Yadkin Valley Rallway Company.

[Fayetteville Gazette.] At last after many years of brave struggling, pressed by adverse fortune and hemmed in by manifold difficulties-the old "Coal Fields" or "Western Railroad"-now the "Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railway"has arrived at the consummation of the great importance of its interests as one of the grand railroad and transportation lines of North Carolina, and its speedy completion to Greensboro and thence on to Mt. Airy may be regarded as almost as-

The Directors' meetings of last Thursday and Friday mornings were very satisfactory. It was shown that the road was entirely freed from its vexatiovs litigation, arrangements having been made to call in the last bond outstanding against the company; the Board was fully represented, only Mr. Moore, of Mt. Airy, being absent. Col. R. L. Patterson, Messrs. G. M. Kathes, J. C. Buxton slavery in the South. President Chad- and Dr. V. O. Thompson, were present, representing the interests of Winston and Salem. After a long conference and some debate the matter was postponed to the July meeting, to be held in Greensboro.

The Board of Directors agreed to ocate the road from Matthews' Cross Roads, via Franklinsville, Randolph county, N. C., provided the amount of $70,000 could be raised by county and individual subscription.

Two hundred convicts are now at work at Ore Hill and Bear Creek and this week there will be at least one hundred more placed on a location of ten miles at Greensboro, working south toward this end of the This will necessitate a change in the base of working, and the engineering party, under Col. L. C. Jones, will be removed next week to point west of Greensboro.

A series of meetings is to be commenced for the next thirty days on the western end of the road, and along the South Yadkin Valley, for the purpose of raising subscription and arousing a proper interest in our great work. Surry county has already responded nobly, and we hope that the example of that sterling old county will be followed by the people of that whole section. The Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railway is destined to be the great freight and transportation carrier of North Carolina. Reaching almost to the Tennessee line, its outlet is the port of Wilmington, an unbroken chain of over 300 miles, with 120 miles of water transportation. It is, in fact, almost the realization of the dream of the old friends of Internal Improvement in North Carolina-s great route, forming the main branch of the "State System" in the building of our railway lines.

Jefferson Davis at Home. |Boston Herald.

The front portion of the pavilion is occupied by Mr. Davis as a library and study. Here I found him, slightly indisposed and lying upon a lounge. His manner is genial and very kindly, with that charming courtesy characteristic of the high bred Southern gentleman.

Seventy years of age, Mr. Davis has yet a fresh and vigorous look. His hair, moustache and whiskers are white in part, but his eye is bright and cheerful. His face in repose is almost severely intellectual, but the smile which lights up his mouth, and his quiet, cheerful laugh dispel the first impression of coldness. Few of our public men have the quiet fascination of manner, the eld-fashioned grace, and the charming conversational powers. His memory is capacious and retentive. One might, with a facile phonographic pen, collect great stores of reminiscence from

OR STATE CONTEMPORARIES.

The sentiment of this community is for economy in all public offices, and against all local freight discrimination—and if these reasonable demands are not listened to, our people will surely remember it when-ever an opportunity is offered.—Kinston

Yes, reading and studying North Carolina history was neglected twenty-five years ago, and it is not much better now. Our children are not taught in the schools of the State much if anything about their own native land. There should be a law requiring public school teachers to use some or all of the many books in existence about North Carolina; and in schools where the law will not operate, parents should demand that their children be instructed in regard to their own State and the prominent men of the past and present day. We hope North Carolinians will begin to show some State pride,—Charlotte Democrat.

Indianapolis, Ind., May 23.—An interview is published with Hendricks on the Courier-Journal attack. He says: "I can only say that article was entirely without truth. I never made any combination of any kind with Mr. Kelley, or any one who acted with or for him; never knew of any appointments or confirmations, and cannot understand the animus of the attack. If there was the slightest truth in the charges made by the Courier Journal, I could imagine that the editor has heard an exaggerted story, but as there is not, I can only say it astonishes me."

Hendricks further says, "I do not ropose to be a candidate for Vice President with any one and have declared this publicly, and so far as I am concerned the old ticket will not be in the field."

Mail Rider's Wonderful Fortitude [Ashville Journal.]

On the postroad from Big Creek, Tenn., to Waynesville, N. C., the mail carrier, George Crook, met with a serious accident some days ago. When he had reached a point on the road about sixteen miles from Waynesville, the way along the mountain side above him and on his left hand was an almost perpendicular elevation of an hundred feet or more. Below him, on his right hand, was a declivity of some twenty feet. Here his horse became suddenly frightened, and plunged over the precipice, carrying his rider with him. Crook's shoulder striking a rock, was broken, and his horse was fatally injured. But Crook courageously threw the mail bag across his unhurt shoulder, and with aching, broken bones, walked sixteen miles through the mountains to Waynesville.
